Giants Bow As St. Louis Wins Way to World Series

Mound Star Turns Back Cincinnati to Climax Thrilling Race.

Brooklyn Defeats New Yorkers Again

'Wonder Team' to Meet Detroit Tigers in Annual Classic.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor, The Post).

St. Louis' dashing Cardinals caught up with the National League pennant yesterday in baseball's most hectic finish in 20 years; triumphant after three weeks of whittling and slashing at the lead of the fading New York Giants.

Victory came to the Cardinals yesterday from two directions, in two guises, either one of which would have been sufficient.

But, taking no chances on the Giants' defeat by Brooklyn, which finally did eventuate, the Cardinals took the bit in their teeth and hammered Cincinnati into a 9-to-0 defeat that deposited the last and conclusive laurel sprig on their embattled brows.

Thus they qualified for the World Series as the foes of the Detroit Tigers in the interleague classic starting on Wednesday.

Fittingly, it was the good right arm of Jerome "Dizzy" Dean that lifted the Cardinals to triumph yesterday; the same Dean who had pitched two days before, and the day before that, as Manager Frankie Frisch and his St. Louis underlings went into the final stages of the race.

Giants Bow to Brooklyn.

As if to make the Cardinals' triumph doubly conclusive, the demoralized Giants, their proud lead of three weeks ago now completely vanished, bowed yesterday to the lowly Brooklyn Dodgers, 8 to 5, in ten innings. Only a victory for the Giants and defeat for the Cardinals yesterday could have sent the two contenders into a deadlock, necessitating a playoff.

Only seven hits did the eccentric "Dizzy" Dean surrender to the Cinninnati club, as the relentless Cards put the clincher on their bid for the pennant. Frisch had summoned the elder half of his famous brother-pitching act to the mound to translate the Cardinals' thrilling challenge into success, and Dizzy did not fail him.

The end of the final day of the season found the Cardinals at National League champions with a margin of two games over the Giants. The final standing:

	W.	L.	Pct.
St. Louis	95	58	.621
New York	93	60	.608

Doubly sour was the disappointing denouement of the Giants, scuttled on the last two days of the season by their arch foes, the Brooklyn Dodgers. With seemingly fiendish delight, the Dodgers contributed to the downfall of Bill Terry's 1933 champions in these last two games. It was their victory over the Giants on Friday that finally sent the Cardinals into the lead, and it was their triumph over Terry's team today that helped to make matters conclusive.

Revenge for Dodgers.

Brooklyn, roused to fighting pitch by the preseason boasts of Terry, who had casually inquired if Brooklyn were still in the league, hopped on Terry's starting pitcher, Roy Parmalee, in the late innings yesterday to wipe out a 4-to-0 lead, tie the game in the ninth, and win in the tenth when the Dodgers bunched three hits off Hal Schumacher and Carl Hubbell.

Three weeks ago, the Cardinals' chances of winning the National League pennant were being freely quoted at 20 to 1, what with the Giants holding a six-game lead, hitting on all cylinders, and seemingly breezing toward the championship.

Edwards Reads Bible Awaiting Murder Trial

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Sept. 30 (AP).—Denying himself to all except his counsel, Bobby Edwards, youthful mine surveyor, thumbed through a Bible in his cell tonight, the eve of his trial on murder charges.

Tomorrow he will face a Luzerne County jury to deny he blackjacked his neighborhood friend, Fred McKechnie, 26, so he could marry Margaret Crain, East Aurora (N. Y.) music teacher.

Yugoslavian King Wins Admiration of Bulgaria

Sofia, Bulgaria, Sept. 30 (AP).—After four days of continuous popular ovations, state banquets and important political conferences with King Boris and members of the Bulgarian government, King Alexander and Queen Marie of Yugoslavia left today for Belgrade.

King Alexander expressed himself as delighted with his visit and predicted that political and economic ties between Yugoslavia and Bulgaria would become stronger.

U. S. Poloists Win Again; Get President's Cup

12,000 See Americans in Third Straight Victory Over Mexico.

By John R. Vosburgh.

This thing of beating the Mexican army polo team is becoming a habit with Uncle Sam's galloping malleteers. The American Army boys yesterday drew the cheers of a gala Sunday crowd of 12,000 by administering a 14-to-4 shellacking to the young men from Mexico at West Potomac Park.

As the Americans already had won the first two matches of the three-game series, 11 to 6 and 12 to 4, yesterday's performance had little to mark it except the difference in score.

The crowd, however, was generous in its applause as each goal was scored, regardless of which team made it, and the game proved a fitting conclusion for Washington's first international polo series.

President's Cup Presented.

In a colorful ceremony at the conclusion of the game, the President Roosevelt Trophy, a handsome silver cup, was presented to Maj. C. C. Smith, captain of the American team, in the presence of a number of dignitaries from both nations. Mrs. George H. Dern, wife of the Secretary of War, made the presentation.

Each member of the United States team also received an individual goblet in commemoration of their international victory. In addition to Maj. Smith the other recipients were Capt. C. O. Davis, Lieut. E. A. Walker, Lieut. George H. Read and Lieut. Harry Stadler. The awards were provided through the Washington Chamber of Commerce.

The game proved a personal triumph for Lieut. Stadler, who as

Typhoon Ravages Island of Luzon

Fourteen Towns Cut Off by Road and Wire.

Manila, Sept. 30 (AP).—Heavy damage to roads, communications and farms was left today in the wake of a typhoon which swept northern Luzon Saturday.

The exact extent of the damage could not be determined, as communications had been disrupted throughout the province of Zambales and at least 14 towns in other provinces could not be reached either by road or wire.

Latest reports of the typhoon placed it 150 miles northwest of Luzon sweeping toward the China Sea.

Owen Urges Sound Money, Central Bank

New York Sept. 30 (U.P.).—A sound money league, to work for the creation of a central bank by the United States Government, was organized here today and a membership campaign inaugurated under the leadership of former Senator Robert L. Owen.

Owen, in a statement of the new organization's purposes, emphasized that its main goal was the "creation of a Government-owned central bank which shall be instructed by legislative mandate" to aid in restoration of confidence and sound banking throughout the country.

The proposed bank would have two major functions:

1. To restore our monetary system by expanding the demand deposits of private banks to a normal level.

2. To thereafter maintain and stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar in such ratio to the produc-

4 Dead, 1 Hurt In Gun Battle

Tavern Owner and Holdup Gang Fight; Two of Bandits Victims.

St. Jacob, Ill., Sept. 30 (AP).—An attempted tavern robbery that ended in a gun fight between the tavern operator, Elmer Jackson, and five bandits early today took the lives of four persons and resulted in the critical wounding of another.

Jackson suffered minor injuries.

The robbers entered the tavern early in the morning, one of them shouting, "This is a stick-up! You're not going to get away this time." Jackson, ocers said, obtained a shotgun and fired into the gang.

Witnesses said Lee Holden, an employe, was shot to death as he begged for his life on his knees. Floyd Hartmann, 29, East St. Louis, a patron, was cut down by the bandit fire and died almost instantly.

As Jackson, hiding behind a door, continued firing, one of the bandits fell and was dragged from the building by his retreating comrades. Another member of the band was wounded.

Harold Shannon, a patro not the tavern, was critically wounded and taken to a hospital at Highland, Ill. Attaches said his condition was critical.

Several hours after the shooting officers found the body of a man identified as Webb Perkins lying in a clump of weeds near a highway several miles distant from the tavern. A critically wounded man was found dnearby and rushed to a hospital in East St. Louis, where he died. Madison County officers said both were members of the bandit gang.

Man Murdered, Harrisonburg Detains Eleven

Mystery Veils Shooting; Town's First Homicide Puzzle in 20 Years.

Harrisonburg, Va., Sept. 30 Spl.). Harrisonburg police tonight were busy trying to solve the first murder mystery to confront them in more than 20 years.

Gleason Calhoun, 26, construction worker, was fatally shot five minutes after midnight today as he left a house in the northeast section of the city, where police say a party was in progress. He died a few minutes after being received at the hospital. He was shot through the heart and in the arm by a .25-caliber automatic.

Police jailed 11 persons who were about the house at the time of the shooting and continued to question them tonight. No announcement was made as to whether any information as to the identity of the assailant was uncovered.

Calhoun was walking on the pavement from the house when he was shot, apparently by a person

French Deputy Avenges Slur With Sword in Stavisky Duel

Saint-Malo, France, Sept. 30 (AP). In a two-minute duel with swords, Guy Lachambre, undersecretary in the Daladier cabinet during the Stavisky scandal, wounded a Paris lawyer in the arm today.

The lawyer, Jacques Renouvin, had slapped Lachambre's face in a Saint-Malo street last week, dubbing him an "assassin" because he was a member of the Daladier ministry.

The affair resulted from the Stavisky scandal and the ensuing riots of February 6 in front of the Chamber of Deputies. Lachambre is a Deputy.

With their seconds, the duellists went to a race track near a friend's estate early this morning. The natty, dark-mustached Lachambre ended the affair with dispatch, pinking the lawyer in the right arm during the initial parry.

The wound was slight, but the agreement called for a halt when one or the other scored a touch. Doctors dressed Renouvin's wound and the two men left the field of honor unreconciled.

It was the third duel growing out of the Stavisky scandal.

The affair lacked the ceremony of the two previous encounters, Lachambre and Renouvin being dressed in street clothes and caps.

It illustrates, however, the resentment throughout France over last winter's riotous events.

An incident that followed the duel made it still more apparent. One of Lachambre's seconds was Gen. Barthelemy, president of the Saint-Malo Officers' Reserve Association. That organization demanded Barthelemy's resignation because of his association in the duel with Lachambre.

The incident that provoked the duel apparently was unpremediated. Lachambre was passing through a Saint-Malo street last Friday, seated in his automobile, which was forced to stop for traffic.

Recognizing the former minister and member of the chamber, Renouvin stepped up to the car and slapped Lachambre twice; then formally presented him his card, saying "I want your seconds."

Nuisance Tax Facing Fight In Congress

Doughton, Hill Head Move to End Levies Causing Irritation.

But Other Assessments to Meet U. S. Deficit Are Foreseen.

By Robert C. Albright.

A battle to supplant expiring Federal nuisance levies with assessments less irritating to the mass of the taxpayers, and at the same time to step up the volume of incoming revenues, is in prospect at the next Congress.

Despite the usual preelection quietus on tax talk, opinion prevails in quarters close to the Administration that taxes to pay for emergency spending are going to play no slight role in the approaching regular session.

The issue will be forced by automatic lifting of special levies to the total of $425,000,000 by the close of this fiscal year, without any provision in the present law for their extension.

A few such taxes—excises on candy and soft drinks—expired before Congress took its last adjournment, and members made no move to replace them. This coming December, a nuisance tax of even more controversial dimensions will go off the books—the levy on checks and bank drafts.

Strong sentiment against nuisance tax renewals persuaded committees on both sides of the Capitol to let this subject drift during the last Congressional scurry for new revenue sources. Business pressure for budget-balancing retrenchment will make it less easy to pass over at another sitting, according to informed opinion here.

If any possible way can be found to drop or curtail the most objectionable of the nuisance excises, Representative Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, has made it clear he intends to throw his influence in that direction.

His opinions are echoed by Representative Sam B. Hill, of Washington, chairman of a special tax subcommittee. Both Doughton and Hill privately express opposition to any general increase in taxation, and the same view has been aired by Chairman Pat Harrison of the Senate Finance Committee.

But despite this opinion, which is widely shared through both Houses, no secret is made of the fact in semiofficial quarters here that the Treasury can use all of the new tax money Congress can find to good advantage, and may make recommendations to this end. It has no scruples against continuing the nuisance levies, either.

Soon after the November elections, Representative Hill plans to meet with his tax subcommittee at the Capitol and go over revenues and debits with Treasury experts, and advisors of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue.

That same subcommittee last session initiated legislation which ultimately resulted in an additional $400,000,000 a year for the Treas-

Union Chief Charges Radicals Plan Dock War

New York, Sept. 30 (AP).—Joseph P. Ryan, president of the International Longshoremen's Union, charged today that radical leaders among longshoremen will attempt to seize control of the New York waterfront tomorrow in an unauthorized strike.

He asserted that these radical elements planned a strike, even though the union had agreed with shipowners on Friday to await developments in the Pacific Coast situation before taking action.

1,000 Search 3 States; Killers Elude Traps

Legenza, Mais Now Thought Still in Richmond; All Police Agencies Work; Rewards Offered, "Dead or Alive;" Roads Guarded.

Richmond, Va., Sept. 30 (AP).—Walter Legenza and Robert Mais, gangsters and condemned murderers who shot their way out of jail here, continued to elude police tonight as more than 1,000 officers were enlisted in the greatest manhunt the State has ever known.

Activity was centered at police headquarters as the entire detective force checked clews and searched houses where known friends of the two men have been living.

Police concentrated on the theory that the gangsters remained in the city or in outlying sections after they had escaped yesterday by shooting down three officers and commandeering a mail truck and a private automobile.

Virginia, Maryland, North Carolina and District of Columbia police, agents of the Department of Justice, county officers and Post-office Department inspectors centered their attention on the case and roads in Virginia were watched constantly.

Officers had orders to bring in Legenza and Mais dead or alive and Mayor J. Fulmer Bright, of Richmond, offered a reward of $1,000 for their capture or death.

Meanwhile, Judge John L. Ingram and Commonwealth's Attorney T. Gray Haddon were considering a grand jury investigation into the escape, especially the manner in which guns were smuggled into the jail. The gangsters had small pistols which officers said could be concealed in their hands when they made their break yesterday.

Both gangsters were to have been transferred to the death cell at the State penitentiary Tuesday, Legenza for electrocution October 22 and Mais for the same fate November 2, for the slaying of E. M. Huband, Federal Reserve mail truck driver, in a holdup here March 8.

Officer William A. Toots was in a critical condition tonight from bullet wounds near the heart inflicted by the gangsters as he met them at the jail entrance, but Dr. J. N. Hillman, police physician, said he had a chance to live. Warden W. A. Moore and Deputy Sergt. John Selph received flesh wounds which were not serious.

Police detained without charge Mrs. Elizabeth Mais, mother of Robert Mais, and found in the jail yard a can which jail attaches said was brought to Mais by his mother. They said that it was sealed and that she told them it contained chicken. Police held it a probable receptacle for the guns.

A search was under way for Mrs. Marie McKeever, a friend of Mais, who had been ordered to leave the city a few days ago as a woman "not of good fame." A search of a hotel room she had rented, police said, revealed a make-up kit and two wigs.

Citizens sent in many reports. One man reported he saw the speeding car used in the getaway, that there were three instead of two men in it and that they had a

Control Body Invokes Ban On Securities

10 Issues Blacklisted as Federal Commission Assumes Power.

(Associated Press.)

Signalizing the control it will begin to administer over the Nation's stock exchanges today, the Federal Securities Commission yesterday refused registration or unlisted trading privileges on any registered exchange to ten securities.

Not only will trading in these issues be prohibited, but brokers and dealers will be barred from using them as collateral for loans for the purpose of carrying or purchasing securities.

No reason was given for the blacklist except that the commission acted "in the public interest and for the protection of investors."

Ten Securities Barred.

The list:

Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Corporation, 15-year secured 6 per cent sinking fund bonds, series A, due June 1, 1949; Apponaug Co., no par value common stock; Carondelet Building, Inc., certificates of deposit for first mortgages 5½s serial gold bonds; Gorham Manufacturing Co., voting trust certificates for no par value common stock expiring June 1, 1939; Helena Rubinstein, Inc., no par value common stock; Knabb Barrel Co., Inc., $1 par value common stock; Rayon Industries Corporation, class A common stock; Republic Stamping & Enameling Co., no par value common stock; Saenger Realty Corporation, certificates of deposit for first mortgage guaranteed 6½ per cent serial gold bonds; Saenger Theaters, Inc., certificates of deposit for first mortgage and collateral trust sinking fund 6 per cent gold bonds.

The Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit security was said at the commission to be an $8,000,000 issue on which a hearing will be held next Wednesday. Meanwhile, and until a final decision is made after the hearing, trading in this security

Big Still Discovered; Sheriff and 7 Arrested

Sioux Falls, S. Dak., Sept. 30 (AP). Eight men, including Sheriff William Russell, of Clay County, and his deputy, George Russell, were being held for Federal officers in the county jail here today following the seizure near Beresford, S. Dak., early this morning of the largest alcohol distilling plant ever uncovered in South Dakota.

Twenty-one Federal agents raided a farm on which the liquor plant, with a daily output of 1,000 gallons, was seized and the eight men taken.

Berlin, Sept. 30 (AP).—More stringent regulations of the economics ministry going into effect tomorrow reduces from 50 to 10 marks the amount of money which may be sent out of Germany. Travelers wishing to take more than 10 marks out of the country must obtain special permits.

The new decree, in effect, makes Germans and resident foreigners Germany's "financial prisoners."

Labor Chiefs Say NRA Has Missed Goal

Failed to Increase Buying Power or Reduce Idle, Is Charge.

San Francisco, Sept. 30 (U.P.).—Sharp criticism of the workings of the NRA was voiced today by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor.

The annual report of the council to the Federation's convention, which opens here tomorrow, devoted pages to an analysis of the effect of the NRA upon the interests of labor. Almost without exception, the effects were found either directly harmful or at least unsatisfactory.

The criticism was devoted to the workings of the recovery program, in actual operation. The NRA and the New Deal itself were not condemned.

Labor's Charges.

But the committee indicted the operations of the program on these main grounds:

That it has failed to increase the purchasing power of workers.

That because it has failed to reduce hours of labor sufficiently it also has failed to create a satisfactory number of new jobs.

That its compliance machinery is ineffective, with the result that violations of the spirit of the codes are easily accomplished and quite general.

Labor does not have proper representation in either code enforcement or administration.

"In one way," the report says, pointing to what seems to be viewed as the only satisfatcory accomplishment thus far under the NRA, "codes have fulfilled expectations. They have, with few exceptions, wiped out child labor."

Higher Living Cost Cited.

Discussing the alleged failure to increase purchasing power of workers, the report says that in 16 industrial groups surveyed in the year ended July, 1934, employment in-

Hatchet Men Slay Hop Sing Gambler; Tong War Feared

Vallejo, Calif., Sept. 30 (AP).—Hatchet men struck down and killed Joe Suen, 40, Chinese gambler, here last night and police today took precautions to prevent a possible tong war.

The slain Chinese, a gambler known as "Little Joe" and a member of the powerful Hop Sing Tong, was attacked by two men as he was passing an alley, police said. His head was split and four bullets were fired into his body.

A bloody hatchet and a revolver, cast aside by the slayers as they fled, were found in the alley.

San Francisco authorities were notified immediately and warned to guard against the possibility of trouble in that city's Chinatown.

Police said Suen may have been killed because of some personal matter in connection with gambling but they believed tong action was certain to follow.

Hauptmann's Books Sifted To Find More Ransom Bills

Walls of House Will Be Examined in Hunt for Hidden Cash.

Alienists to Study Suspect This Week

Prisoner Still Guarded Against Suicide; Wife Faces Nazi Inquiry.

New York, Sept. 30 (AP).—A detailed study of six notebooks in which Bruno Richard Hauptmann methodically jotted down household and financial records is being undertaken, it was disclosed today, in a search for new evidence of the passing of Lindbergh ransom notes.

District Attorney Samuel J. Foley, of the Bronx, has guarded carefully the contents of the memoranda found in the home of Hauptmann, already indicted for extorting the $50,000 ransom.

The records are understood, however, to have furnished clews to shops where Hauptmann passed some of the gold notes which have not yet come to light.

Proprietors of these stores will be questioned tomorrow, it was reported, for data on when or how Hauptmann may have disposed of the bills.

Potential Key in Case

The books are regarded as one of the potential keys in the case being built up against Hauptmann. The extortion trial is expected to start in two weeks unless New Jersey officials first move for extradition on murder or kidnaping charges.

The journals, it was said unofficially, contain Hauptmann's expenditures in the order of their occurrence from a date before the kidnaping until recent weeks.

Hauptmann passed an uneventful Sabbath in his Bronx Jail cell.

The prisoner, closely watched to prevent any attempt at suicide, ate a breakfast of coffee, bread and jelly served in paper utensils. The warden, visiting him shortly afterward, was received in silence. Hauptmann was not permitted to see visitors.

Meanwhile nine patrolmen were on duty at the Hauptmann home in the Bronx to keep Sunday sightseers at a distance. Automobile and pedestrian traffic became heavy in the afternoon, although the crowds were smaller than last Sunday.

Affidavit Dismissal.

An extortion affidavit on which the prisoner was arraigned last week will be dismissed tomorrow in West Side Court on Foley's application. An indictment by the Bronx County grand jury supersedes it. The prisoner will not appear in court, officials said.

The walls of Hauptmann's apartment also will be examined tomorrow in an effort to find more of the ransom bills. So far $14,590 of the ransom has been recovered in the prisoner's garage.

A renewal of the district attorney's drive to complete his case also will bring, during the week, a mental examination of Hauptmann by three alienists, and an applica-

Rain Records Smashed Here

Fall in September Greatest in History of Local Weather Bureau.

More rain fell here in September than in any other month since the Weather Bureau started recording the precipitation, is was learned yesterday.

The total was 17.45 inches, according to bureau tabulations. That was 3.04 inches above the former monthly rainfall record of 14.41 inches set in August, 1928, and 6.65 inches above September, 1876, the next rainiest September.

The month was more or less moderate as far as rainfall was concerned until September 12, when in one hour a cloudburst poured more water on the Capital than had fallen in any similar period in the 63-year-old records of the bureau. That downpour put the month within a few inches of the all-time September record. In a few days this was broken, and shortly afterward a new all-time monthly rainfall high was set. Rain fell to some extent on nearly three-quarters of the days in the month, bureau records show.

The month's final deluge began Saturday night about 8 o'clock and carried on until yesterday at 8 a. m.

Today will be fair and cooler, the bureau's forecasters say, with gentle northwest winds.

Jersey Delays Asking Custody Of Hauptmann

No Move Till Next Week; Kidnap Death Called First-Degree Crime.

Trenton, Sept. 30 (AP).—Bruno Richard Hauptmann, indicted on a charge of extortion in the Lindbergh kidnaping case, has at least one more week in New York before New Jersey will seek extradition on murder or kidnaping charges.

A high State official said today all indications were that New Jersey would not start action to bring the German carpenter across the Hudson before next week.

Meanwhile, 20 troopers under the direction of Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, head the of the State police, continued efforts to turn up new evidence which might connect Hauptmann with the actual kidnaping.

The kidnaper or kidnapers may not have intended to kill Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., when he was carried fro mhis nursery, but legal authorities say the New Jersey law holds the criminal must suffer the consequences of his act—in this instance, first-degree murder.

A theory of the cause of the child's death, heard often, attributes it to a fall when the ladder, down which the child was carried, broke.

Thus arose the question of whether the State, in seeking the extreme penalty—death in the electric chair—would have to prove the killing was premeditated.

State legal aids, quoting the statutes, hold it would not be necessary.

The comprehensive crimes act, revised in 1898, includes in its definition of first degree murder any homicide "which shall be committed in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate any arson, burglary * * * robbery * * *."

The same statute says any person is guilty of burglary who "shall by night, wilfully or maliciously break and enter any * * * dwelling house * * * with intent to kill, rob, steal, commit * * * battery."

It was pointed out that the words to "steal" and to commit "battery" are significant in the Lindbergh case.

Most questions submitted to the State police head brought answers of "no statement," "nothing significant," "nothing to report," or "no information available."

Note Detector's Baby Named for Lindbergh

New York, Sept. 30 (U.P.).—Charles Augustus Lyons was reported "doing fine" today, 24 hours after his birth.

He is the son of John Lyons, one of the filling station employes who detected the gold note tendered by Bruno Richard Hauptmann, leading to Hauptmann's arrest. Lyons, who expects to share reward money if Hauptmann is convicted, named his son after Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

Excise Taxes Face Fight in Congress

ury, principally by plugging loopholes and adjusting income-tax brackets.

A research foundation for whatever tax action is taken has been carefully acquired by L. H. Parker, of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue, in conjunction with Dr. Roswell Magill, tax advisor to Secretary of the Treasury Morganthau. The two spent most of the summer studying comparative satistics in England, and will pass the rest of the fall completing their studies.

Most controversial of the nuisance levies that Doughton and Hill would like to see displaced "as soon as the Treasury can stand the drain" are Federal taxes on admissions and gasoline. The first of these automatically will be reduced on June 30 next year; the gasoline tax will expire on the same date.

Other assessments that will go off the books either June 30 or July 31, 1935, unless extensions are ordered, are taxes on conveyances, lubricating oil, grape concentrates, matches, electrical energy, tires and tubes, toilet preparations, furs, jewelry, auto trucks, automobiles and motorcycles, automobile parts, radio sets, phonographs, mechanical refrigerators, firearms, cartridges, chewing gum, piping of oil and telegraph, telephone and cable messages.

Five hours later, at Providence Hospital, Mrs. Wendell gave birth to a three-pound son, John.

Between You and Me

President Makes Peace Gesture by Leaving Devils Lake to Resources Board.

By Raymond Clapper

THE Devils Lake matter is up again and President Roosevelt has made a gesture to keep peace in the family. He has agreed to have the National Resources Board look into it immediately. Young Senator Gerald Nye, a Republican who is supporting the Democratic candidate for Governor in North Dakota, persuaded the President to do this.

The Devils Lake matter is a little proposed PWA item of some $80,000,000 which would involve diverting water from the Missouri River to Devils Lake, N. Dak., 100 miles away, by building 21 miles of tunnels, 30 miles of canal and using 50 miles of stagnant river beds. The purpose is to freshen the brackish lake on the outskirts of a small town in North Dakota. The lake gives off an odor faintly suggesting old eggs, has dropped 23 feet since the first settlers arrived and is unfit for man or beast. Even fish can't live in it. The thought is that by running fresh water into the lake it would be good for fishing and wouldn't smell.

When Mr. Roosevelt looked at it on his recent trip back from Hawaii, he was not sold, and said the dam which would have to be built might be unsafe. But Mr. Roosevelt does not like to give a final "no," especially at this time. So the National Resources Board will study the matter at least until after election.

There is serious worry in Administration quarters as to what Gen. Johnson is going to say in the book he is writing. Notwithstanding the honeyed words which were exchanged between the President and Gen. Johnson when they parted, it is known that the general has a good deal on his chest. The real concern is whether "Robbie," who wants him to tell all, will have her way with the manuscript.

* * * *

Until Secretary of State Hull and George Peek, special adviser on foreign trade, get together on policy, export wheels won't turn as fast as they might. Mr. Peek, a business man, wants to go into a barter deal wherever he sees a chance to trade something American for something foreign. He is a direct actionist. Secretary Hull, wrestling to bring his long dream of a network of reciprocal trade treaties into reality, thinks Mr. Peek's direct barters would be small-time, piecemeal stopgaps which would have little effect in stimulating foreign trade.

The case in point is Germany. She sells more to Great Britain, France, Switzerland and Holland than she buys. But these countries are refusing to pay her the balances due, holding them back to apply against obligations or to force Germany to take it out in additional purchases. Germany buys more from the United States than she sells, but, being unable to collect her balances from other countries, she can not pay America the difference due. Therefore she wants to barter machinery for cotton and pork. Mr. Peek, seeing that pork exports are way down and that Germany has been forced to cut her purchases of American cotton about in half this year, says a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush. Secretary Hull objects. He says it would limit America's sales to Germany to the amount we would take in exchange, when Germany ought to consider the triangular possibilities and sell part of her machinery, for instance, to Brazil and use the proceeds of that to buy American cotton. We would even up with Brazil by taking her coffee. This is the issue in simplified form.

* * * *

There are some 200 barter arrangements among various nations and the United States is not in on any of them. American foreign trade promotion, instead of being pushed through centralized control, is scattered among some 50 bureaus and Government agencies, some working at cross-purposes. In spite of this, there is for the first time in four years reviving hope that trade abroad may help business revival. Exports last month were better. Ten thousand more automobiles were sold abroad than in August a year ago. Copper sold almost twice as well. We sold more tobacco, meats, wheat, flour and lumber.

Central Bank and Sound Money Are Objectives of New Group

Says Plan Would Cut Debt.

Mr. Owen insisted that such a program would "reduce debt, increase employment, restore wages, salaries, individual and corporate earnings and incomes, and would cause property values to rise, thereby creating higher tax revenues to our National, State and municipal governments."

The sound money league favors a central bank, but Mr. Owen's statement emphasized that "the league wishes it clearly understood that such a purpose can be accomplished without inflation, and without the central bank's becoming a competitor to the private banking institutions of the country."

In more definitely defining the purpose of the bank, he said:

"The central bank should fill the gap left in the Nation's creditmoney system through the destruction of some $20,000,000,000 in bank deposits, and to make the buying and debt-paying power of the dollar stable. This we believe can be worked out by the committees in Congress in such manner that there need be no call for the Government's going into the business of commercial lending."

Criticizes Federal Reserve.

The former Senator took occasion at attack the Federal Reserve system, commenting:

"* * * the Federal Reserve system has notably failed to accomplish the purpose for which it was created. Our bankers, who are in charge of the system, expand credit in speculative times when it should be contracted, and contract it in bad times when it should be expanded and made available. For this reason it is clear that a privately owned system of control can never attain the economic security which the country needs. * * *

"The American people are fed-up with three decades of broken promises and procrastination and five years of depression and poverty. In increasing numbers, the people are beginning to believe that there is no good in any part of our privately-owned banking system. The sentiment that every bank in the Nation should be owned and operated by the Government is spreading with alarming speed.

"The Sound Money League is firmly opposed to socialization of American banking. The league believes, however, that the reorganization of our banking system and the prompt creation of a Government-owned central agency to stabilize money and provide credit may be the only instrument which can save the private banks."

Owen added that his league proposed to organize State committees in every State, and invited "every citizen of good will to join in an organized effort to put this plan into effect immediately."

Hauptmann underwent physical examinations yesterday, but his mentality has not yet been studied by psychiatrists.

Foley remained silent on his questioning of a mysterious woman whom he described last night as a "very important" witness. He has not disclosed her identity even to his assistants, he said.

Instead of taking her before the grand jury, where her name would have become known, he questioned her privately on at least two occasions.

Mrs. Anna Hauptmann, the prisoner's wife, has been subpenaed to appear tomorrow before Representative Samuel Dickstein, representing the House Committee investigating Nazi activities in the United States.

"We want to see if Mrs. Hauptmann or her husband had any connection with the Nazi program here," Dickstein said.

hiding in an automobile parked at the curb, according to Glenn Smith, who was on the porch of the house at the time. Smith said he heard the tssailant tell Calhoun he was going to shoot him and heard Calhoun tell him to shoot.

Jealousy over a woman is believed by police to have been responsible for the shooting. Calhoun is married, but has been separated from his wife for some months. Police are making a close check on the women he is known to have gone with in recent months in an effort to find some of their friends who may have shot him because of jealousy.

Calhoun is the first white man to be shot to death in Harrisonburg in the past two decades. During this peroid there have been only three homicides in the city and two of these were colored. The other was a woman, whose husband slashed her throat. Because of the absence of such crime here, the shooting attracted widespread interest and the pail, undertaking parlor and scene of the shooting were thronged by curious crowds during the day. No one was permitted to talk to any of the 11 held by police.

Texan Slays Wife, Son, Then Himself

Clothing of Victims Set Afire by Shotgun Blast.

Stephenville, Tex., Sept. 30 (AP). The wife and son of Jess Salter, highway maintenance operator, were found shot to death at their home last night and shortly afterward, Salter was found dead at the home of a neighbor, with a shotgun and pistol lying beside him. Police termed the deaths double murder and sucide.

Both the bodies of Mrs. Salter and her small son were wet, apparently having been drenched when their clothing was set afire by charges at close range from a shotgun.

Another son, who hid behind a tree when his father began shooting, was suffering today from shock and was unable to relate what occurred at the Salter home.

Inflation Orgy Menaces U. S., Economists Say

National Body Demands Election of Sound Money Congress.

New York, Sept. 30 (U.P.).—The United States faces an orgy of currency inflation which will culminate in disaster and impoverishment unless the next Congress has a majority which will stand for a sound-money program, members of the economists' national committee on monetary policy believe.

Names of 53 members were signed to a bulletin issued tonight which said that developing conditions and movements "point definitely toward dangerous inflation and to further mutilation of our currency system in the near future."

"The so-called committee for the nation and others already have begun a drive for further devaluation of the dollar," the bulletin said. "Recently the Northeastern group of presidents and secretaries of the State farm bureaus joined in the same movement. The silver advocates are dissatisfied with the last silver act, and those who urge the issue of unsecured or fiat paper money have revealed definite intentions of forcing such paper money on the country.

Ask for Sound Money Men.

"We believe it is imperative to elect to Congress sound money men who understand that the problem of bringing about economic recovery is not a question of increasing the money supply, but one of enabling business to resume productive activities with reasonable assurance of conditions under which a profitable outcome may be anticipated.

"We therefore urge that voters elect to the next Congress only those candidates who, regardless of party, (1) will oppose further weakening of our currency structure, (2) will oppose further devaluation of our monetary unit, (3) will oppose further pro-silver measures, (4) will oppose paper money inflation, (5) will oppose bimetallism, symmetalism, and the commodity dollar, (6) will vote for repeal of all currency provisions of the Thomas amendment of May 12, 1933, (7) will insist on a return to an outright gold standard with a unit of weight not less than the present 15 5-21 grains of standard gold, and (8) will urge Government cooperation in international stabilization of currencies."

Hot Dogs Take Fancy Of Famous Ritz Patrons

Paris (U.P.).—Hot dogs have gone into society. The Hotel Ritz now is serving them at tea time with buns and mustard, cocktails, port or orangeade.

Two years ago the manufacturers of hot dogs in France launched a campaign to popularize their product, but it is doubtful if they ever anticipated invading the swank hotels.

Called "Saucisses de Francfort," hot dogs are not a novelty in France, although their general popularity is not equal to the American standard. They now are available, however, in hundreds of French cafes and attractive posters, written in English, French and German, proclaim the virtues of hot dogs.

Gen. Johnson Remark Echoes in High Court

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Speculation regarding the effect Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson's recent remarks connecting Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis with the NRA will have on cases involving the validity of legislation creating that agency has been widespread in legal circles during the past week.

The belief among lawyers here is that Gen. Johnson's remarks have seriously embarrassed Justice Brandeis and may cause him to withdraw from participation in the review of attacks on the NRA which are scheduled to come before the Supreme Court in the term which begins at noon today.

Withdrawal of Justice Brandeis from consideration of such cases may result in a deadlocked court, since in the Minnesota mortgage moratorium and the New York milk cases last winter the court divided five to four in upholding those legislative acts. Justice Brandeis was one of the so-called "liberal" majority in those cases. If the alignment of the court last winter continues this year and Justice Brandeis withdraws from participation in NRA decisions, the result would be four to four or no decision.

The effect of such a possibility on the New Deal can not be appraised until it actually takes place. Nevertheless, lawyers here regard it as one of the most interesting possible incidents in the history of the court, while members of the Roosevelt Administration are somewhat concerned over the consequences of Gen. Johnson's apparently casual reference to Justice Brandeis.

General Referred to Brandeis.

Gen. Johnson's remarks referring to Justice Brandeis were made two weeks ago in New York in the speech in which he assailed the textile workers. It was this speech which many regarded as leading to Gen. Johnson's resignation from the NRA.

The recovery administrator said he would not say much about the reorganizatoin plans for the NRA, except that it was the President's intention to model it along the lines of political government with administrative, legislative and judicial functions separated.

"There is one thing I have to say about thta," Gen. ohnson continued, "that is right." During the whole intense experience I have been in constant touch with that old counsellor, Judge Louis Brandeis. As you know he things that anything that is too big is bound to be wrong. He thinks NRA is too big and I agree with him. I don't know whether dividing it up in this fashion will satisfy his idea or not but I want to make one thing very plain—whatever there is of reorganization in NRA will be worked out by the President and no one else."

There has been no denial that Gen. Johnson consulted frequently with Justice Brandeis about the NRA. Some lawyers here contend that Gen. ohnson's remarks in effect meant that one of the parties to a prospective subject of litigation had been in consultation with a member of the court—prior to the hearing. Others do not go quite that far, contending it depends on what Gen. ohnson discussed with Justice Brandeis. But there is almost unanimous agreement that the Johnson remarks placed Justice Brandeis in a difficult position.

It is contended that there is no jurist in the country with higher standards than Justice Brandeis and that frequently Supreme Court justices have excused themselves from participation in a case because they had a more remote connection with one of the litigants.

431 Cases Facing Court.

When the Supreme Court convenes today it will be faced by a docket containing 431 cases. Of this number only 33 are ready to be heard on their merits. Under the schedule prepared for the court, hearing of these cases will be completed by November 1. The remainder of the pending petitions request writs of certiorari, the first step in the procedure of getting a case before the Supreme Court.

The nine members of the court will make their formal call on President Roosevelt today, led by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes. They will then hear motions for writs of certiorari and reviews and will receive applications of lawyers to practice before the court.

The tribunal will then recess until next Monday when it will meet to hand down orders on motions and petitions for writs of certiorari—orders to other courts to submit the records in particular cases to the high tribunal. Hearing of arguments in cases then will start and continue daily for two weeks.

In the meanwhile the court will have granted requests to review 50 or more of the pending cases and these will be in preparation for argument during the fal land winter. So far only five cases involving New Deal legislation are pending before the court, but before the winter ends it is expected that a score or more such cases will arrive from circuit courts of appeal where they are now pending.

Armenian Caught After Hiding for 15 Years

Istanbul (U.P.).—Stepan Hatchadourian, an Armenian living in Istanbul, stayed indoors for 15 years.

Thinking that after such a time, his altered appearance would prevent recognition, he ventured out into the streets and cafes.

The long-memoried Turkish police were not long in picking him up on a murder charge.

Hatchadourian had been with the allied forces when Istanbul was occupied after the armistice. With two companions it is alleged that he killed two Turkish policemen when they remonstrated with the trio for annoying a Turkish woman.

Jersey Delays Asking Custody Of Hauptmann

No Move Till Next Week; Kidnap Death Called First-Degree Crime.

Trenton, Sept. 30 (AP).—Bruno Richard Hauptmann, indicted on a charge of extortion in the Lindbergh kidnaping case, has at least one more week in New York before New Jersey will seek extradition on murder or kidnaping charges.

A high State official said today all indications were that New Jersey would not start action to bring the German carpenter across the Hudson before next week.

Meanwhile, 20 troopers under the direction of Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, head the of the State police, continued efforts to turn up new evidence which might connect Hauptmann with the actual kidnaping.

The kidnaper or kidnapers may not have intended to kill Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., when he was carried fro mhis nursery, but legal authorities say the New Jersey law holds the criminal must suffer the consequences of his act—in this instance, first-degree murder.

A theory of the cause of the child's death, heard often, attributes it to a fall when the ladder, down which the child was carried, broke.

Thus arose the question of whether the State, in seeking the extreme penalty—death in the electric chair—would have to prove the killing was premeditated.

State legal aids, quoting the statutes, hold it would not be necessary.

The comprehensive crimes act, revised in 1898, includes in its definition of first degree murder any homicide "which shall be committed in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate any arson, burglary * * * robbery * * *."

The same statute says any person is guilty of burglary who "shall by night, wilfully or maliciously break and enter any * * * dwelling house * * * with intent to kill, rob, steal, commit * * * battery."

It was pointed out that the words to "steal" and to commit "battery" are significant in the Lindbergh case.

Most questions submitted to the State police head brought answers of "no statement," "nothing significant," "nothing to report," or "no information available."

Note Detector's Baby Named for Lindbergh

New York, Sept. 30 (U.P.).—Charles Augustus Lyons was reported "doing fine" today, 24 hours after his birth.

He is the son of John Lyons, one of the filling station employes who detected the gold note tendered by Bruno Richard Hauptmann, leading to Hauptmann's arrest. Lyons, who expects to share reward money if Hauptmann is convicted, named his son after Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

Excise Taxes Face Fight in Congress

ury, principally by plugging loopholes and adjusting income-tax brackets.

A research foundation for whatever tax action is taken has been carefully acquired by L. H. Parker, of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue, in conjunction with Dr. Roswell Magill, tax advisor to Secretary of the Treasury Morganthau. The two spent most of the summer studying comparative satistics in England, and will pass the rest of the fall completing their studies.

Most controversial of the nuisance levies that Doughton and Hill would like to see displaced "as soon as the Treasury can stand the drain" are Federal taxes on admissions and gasoline. The first of these automatically will be reduced on June 30 next year; the gasoline tax will expire on the same date.

Other assessments that will go off the books either June 30 or July 31, 1935, unless extensions are ordered, are taxes on conveyances, lubricating oil, grape concentrates, matches, electrical energy, tires and tubes, toilet preparations, furs, jewelry, auto trucks, automobiles and motorcycles, automobile parts, radio sets, phonographs, mechanical refrigerators, firearms, cartridges, chewing gum, piping of oil and telegraph, telephone and cable messages.

President Makes Peace Gesture by Leaving Devils Lake to Resources Board.

By Raymond Clapper

THE Devils Lake matter is up again and President Roosevelt has made a gesture to keep peace in the family. He has agreed to have the National Resources Board look into it immediately. Young Senator Gerald Nye, a Republican who is supporting the Democratic candidate for Governor in North Dakota, persuaded the President to do this.

The Devils Lake matter is a little proposed PWA item of some $80,000,000 which would involve diverting water from the Missouri River to Devils Lake, N. Dak., 100 miles away, by building 21 miles of tunnels, 30 miles of canal and using 50 miles of stagnant river beds. The purpose is to freshen the brackish lake on the outskirts of a small town in North Dakota. The lake gives off an odor faintly suggesting old eggs, has dropped 23 feet since the first settlers arrived and is unfit for man or beast. Even fish can't live in it. The thought is that by running fresh water into the lake it would be good for fishing and wouldn't smell.

When Mr. Roosevelt looked at it on his recent trip back from Hawaii, he was not sold, and said the dam which would have to be built might be unsafe. But Mr. Roosevelt does not like to give a final "no," especially at this time. So the National Resources Board will study the matter at least until after election.

* * * *

Maryland Democrats are ready to yield the honors on campaign slogans if the Republicans who are running H. Whinna Nice against Gov. Ritchie use this one: "No Nice people will vote for Ritchie."

* * * *

There is serious worry in Administration quarters as to what Gen. Johnson is going to say in the book he is writing. Notwithstanding the honeyed words which were exchanged between the President and Gen. Johnson when they parted, it is known that the general has a good deal on his chest. The real concern is whether "Robbie," who wants him to tell all, will have her way with the manuscript.

* * * *

Until Secretary of State Hull and George Peek, special adviser on foreign trade, get together on policy, export wheels won't turn as fast as they might. Mr. Peek, a business man, wants to go into a barter deal wherever he sees a chance to trade something American for something foreign. He is a direct actionist. Secretary Hull, wrestling to bring his long dream of a network of reciprocal trade treaties into reality, thinks Mr. Peek's direct barters would be small-time, piecemeal stopgaps which would have little effect in stimulating foreign trade.

The case in point is Germany. She sells more to Great Britain, France, Switzerland and Holland than she buys. But these countries are refusing to pay her the balances due, holding them back to apply against obligations or to force Germany to take it out in additional purchases. Germany buys more from the United States than she sells, but, being unable to collect her balances from other countries, she can not pay America the difference due. Therefore she wants to barter machinery for cotton and pork. Mr. Peek, seeing that pork exports are way down and that Germany has been forced to cut her purchases of American cotton about in half this year, says a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush. Secretary Hull objects. He says it would limit America's sales to Germany to the amount we would take in exchange, when Germany ought to consider the triangular possibilities and sell part of her machinery, for instance, to Brazil and use the proceeds of that to buy American cotton. We would even up with Brazil by taking her coffee. This is the issue in simplified form.

* * * *

There are some 200 barter arrangements among various nations and the United States is not in on any of them. American foreign trade promotion, instead of being pushed through centralized control, is scattered among some 50 bureaus and Government agencies, some working at cross-purposes. In spite of this, there is for the first time in four years reviving hope that trade abroad may help business revival. Exports last month were better. Ten thousand more automobiles were sold abroad than in August a year ago. Copper sold almost twice as well. We sold more tobacco, meats, wheat, flour and lumber.

Central Bank and Sound Money Are Objectives of New Group

Says Plan Would Cut Debt.

Mr. Owen insisted that such a program would "reduce debt, increase employment, restore wages, salaries, individual and corporate earnings and incomes, and would cause property values to rise, thereby creating higher tax revenues to our National, State and municipal governments."

The sound money league favors a central bank, but Mr. Owen's statement emphasized that "the league wishes it clearly understood that such a purpose can be accomplished without inflation, and without the central bank's becoming a competitor to the private banking institutions of the country."

In more definitely defining the purpose of the bank, he said:

"The central bank should fill the gap left in the Nation's creditmoney system through the destruction of some $20,000,000,000 in bank deposits, and to make the buying and debt-paying power of the dollar stable. This we believe can be worked out by the committees in Congress in such manner that there need be no call for the Government's going into the business of commercial lending."

Criticizes Federal Reserve.

The former Senator took occasion at attack the Federal Reserve system, commenting:

"* * * the Federal Reserve system has notably failed to accomplish the purpose for which it was created. Our bankers, who are in charge of the system, expand credit in speculative times when it should be contracted, and contract it in bad times when it should be expanded and made available. For this reason it is clear that a privately owned system of control can never attain the economic security which the country needs. * * *

"The American people are fed-up with three decades of broken promises and procrastination and five years of depression and poverty. In increasing numbers, the people are beginning to believe that there is no good in any part of our privately-owned banking system. The sentiment that every bank in the Nation should be owned and operated by the Government is spreading with alarming speed.

"The Sound Money League is firmly opposed to socialization of American banking. The league believes, however, that the reorganization of our banking system and the prompt creation of a Government-owned central agency to stabilize money and provide credit may be the only instrument which can save the private banks."

Owen added that his league proposed to organize State committees in every State, and invited "every citizen of good will to join in an organized effort to put this plan into effect immediately."

hiding in an automobile parked at the curb, according to Glenn Smith, who was on the porch of the house at the time. Smith said he heard the tssailant tell Calhoun he was going to shoot him and heard Calhoun tell him to shoot.

Jealousy over a woman is believed by police to have been responsible for the shooting. Calhoun is married, but has been separated from his wife for some months. Police are making a close check on the women he is known to have gone with in recent months in an effort to find some of their friends who may have shot him because of jealousy.

Calhoun is the first white man to be shot to death in Harrisonburg in the past two decades. During this peroid there have been only three homicides in the city and two of these were colored. The other was a woman, whose husband slashed her throat. Because of the absence of such crime here, the shooting attracted widespread interest and the pail, undertaking parlor and scene of the shooting were thronged by curious crowds during the day. No one was permitted to talk to any of the 11 held by police.

Texan Slays Wife, Son, Then Himself

Clothing of Victims Set Afire by Shotgun Blast.

Stephenville, Tex., Sept. 30 (AP). The wife and son of Jess Salter, highway maintenance operator, were found shot to death at their home last night and shortly afterward, Salter was found dead at the home of a neighbor, with a shotgun and pistol lying beside him. Police termed the deaths double murder and sucide.

Both the bodies of Mrs. Salter and her small son were wet, apparently having been drenched when their clothing was set afire by charges at close range from a shotgun.

Another son, who hid behind a tree when his father began shooting, was suffering today from shock and was unable to relate what occurred at the Salter home.

Inflation Orgy Menaces U. S., Economists Say

National Body Demands Election of Sound Money Congress.

New York, Sept. 30 (U.P.).—The United States faces an orgy of currency inflation which will culminate in disaster and impoverishment unless the next Congress has a majority which will stand for a sound-money program, members of the economists' national committee on monetary policy believe.

Names of 53 members were signed to a bulletin issued tonight which said that developing conditions and movements "point definitely toward dangerous inflation and to further mutilation of our currency system in the near future."

"The so-called committee for the nation and others already have begun a drive for further devaluation of the dollar," the bulletin said. "Recently the Northeastern group of presidents and secretaries of the State farm bureaus joined in the same movement. The silver advocates are dissatisfied with the last silver act, and those who urge the issue of unsecured or fiat paper money have revealed definite intentions of forcing such paper money on the country.

Ask for Sound Money Men.

"We believe it is imperative to elect to Congress sound money men who understand that the problem of bringing about economic recovery is not a question of increasing the money supply, but one of enabling business to resume productive activities with reasonable assurance of conditions under which a profitable outcome may be anticipated.

"We therefore urge that voters elect to the next Congress only those candidates who, regardless of party, (1) will oppose further weakening of our currency structure, (2) will oppose further devaluation of our monetary unit, (3) will oppose further pro-silver measures, (4) will oppose paper money inflation, (5) will oppose bimetallism, symmetalism, and the commodity dollar, (6) will vote for repeal of all currency provisions of the Thomas amendment of May 12, 1933, (7) will insist on a return to an outright gold standard with a unit of weight not less than the present 15 5-21 grains of standard gold, and (8) will urge Government cooperation in international stabilization of currencies."

Hot Dogs Take Fancy Of Famous Ritz Patrons

Paris (U.P.).—Hot dogs have gone into society. The Hotel Ritz now is serving them at tea time with buns and mustard, cocktails, port or orangeade.

Two years ago the manufacturers of hot dogs in France launched a campaign to popularize their product, but it is doubtful if they ever anticipated invading the swank hotels.

Called "Saucisses de Francfort," hot dogs are not a novelty in France, although their general popularity is not equal to the American standard. They now are available, however, in hundreds of French cafes and attractive posters, written in English, French and German, proclaim the virtues of hot dogs.

Gen. Johnson Remark Echoes in High Court

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Speculation regarding the effect Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson's recent remarks connecting Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis with the NRA will have on cases involving the validity of legislation creating that agency has been widespread in legal circles during the past week.

The belief among lawyers here is that Gen. Johnson's remarks have seriously embarrassed Justice Brandeis and may cause him to withdraw from participation in the review of attacks on the NRA which are scheduled to come before the Supreme Court in the term which begins at noon today.

Withdrawal of Justice Brandeis from consideration of such cases may result in a deadlocked court, since in the Minnesota mortgage moratorium and the New York milk cases last winter the court divided five to four in upholding those legislative acts. Justice Brandeis was one of the so-called "liberal" majority in those cases. If the alignment of the court last winter continues this year and Justice Brandeis withdraws from participation in NRA decisions, the result would be four to four or no decision.

The effect of such a possibility on the New Deal can not be appraised until it actually takes place. Nevertheless, lawyers here regard it as one of the most interesting possible incidents in the history of the court, while members of the Roosevelt Administration are somewhat concerned over the consequences of Gen. Johnson's apparently casual reference to Justice Brandeis.

General Referred to Brandeis.

Gen. Johnson's remarks referring to Justice Brandeis were made two weeks ago in New York in the speech in which he assailed the textile workers. It was this speech which many regarded as leading to Gen. Johnson's resignation from the NRA.

The recovery administrator said he would not say much about the reorganizatoin plans for the NRA, except that it was the President's intention to model it along the lines of political government with administrative, legislative and judicial functions separated.

"There is one thing I have to say about thta," Gen. ohnson continued, "that is, right." During the whole intense experience I have been in constant touch with that old counsellor, Judge Louis Brandeis. As you know he things that anything that is too big is bound to be wrong. He thinks NRA is too big and I agree with him. I don't know whether dividing it up in this fashion will satisfy his idea or not but I want to make one thing very plain—whatever there is of reorganization in NRA will be worked out by the President and no one else."

There has been no denial that Gen. Johnson consulted frequently with Justice Brandeis about the NRA. Some lawyers here contend that Gen. ohnson's remarks in effect meant that one of the parties to a prospective subject of litigation had been in consultation with a member of the court—prior to the hearing. Others do not go quite that far, contending it depends on what Gen. ohnson discussed with Justice Brandeis. But there is almost unanimous agreement that the Jchnson remarks placed Justice Brandeis in a difficult position.

It is contended that there is no jurist in the country with higher standards than Justice Brandeis and that frequently Supreme Court justices have excused themselves from participation in a case because they had a more remote connection with one of the litigants.

431 Cases Facing Court.

When the Supreme Court convenes today it will be faced by a docket containing 431 cases. Of this number only 33 are ready to be heard on their merits. Under the schedule prepared for the court, hearing of these cases will be completed by November 1. The remainder of the pending petitions request writs of certiorari, the first step in the procedure of getting a case before the Supreme Court.

The nine members of the court will make their formal call on President Roosevelt today, led by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes. They will then hear motions for writs of certiorari and reviews and will receive applications of lawyers to practice before the court.

The tribunal will then recess until next Monday when it will meet to hand down orders on motions and petitions for writs of certiorari—orders to other courts to submit the records in particular cases to the high tribunal. Hearing of arguments in cases then will start and continue daily for two weeks.

In the meanwhile the court will have granted requests to review 50 or more of the pending cases and these will be in preparation for argument during the fal land winter. So far only five cases involving New Deal legislation are pending before the court, but before the winter ends it is expected that a score or more such cases will arrive from circuit courts of appeal where they are now pending.

Armenian Caught After Hiding for 15 Years

Istanbul (U.P.).—Stepan Hatchadourian, an Armenian living in Istanbul, stayed indoors for 15 years.

Thinking that after such a time, his altered appearance would prevent recognition, he ventured out into the streets and cafes.

The long-memoried Turkish police were not long in picking him up on a murder charge.

Hatchadourian had been with the allied forces when Istanbul was occupied after the armistice. With two companions it is alleged that he killed two Turkish policemen when they remonstrated with the trio for annoying a Turkish woman.

2 Glider Pilots 5 Hours in Air

But Fail in Attempts to Set Altitude Record at Big Meadows.

Big Meadows, Va., Sept. 30 (AP).—Lewin Barringer, of Philadelphia, of Philadelphia, and Warren Eaton, president of the Soaring Society of America, made glider flights of more than five hours' duration today before landing their motorless machines in a large field near the Front Royal entrance to the Skyline Drive.

Barringer, who completed requirements for his Class D glider pilot's certificate, said he soared for two hours above the ridge near Front Royal, but came down after conditions prevented his going further. Barringer took off at 8:25 a. m. and landed at 1:40 p. m. Eaton took off at 9:29 a. m. and landed at 1:15 p. m.

Both pilots hovered over Big Meadows for more than two hours in an attempt to reach record altitudes. They passed out of sight at an elevation of around 2,000 feet and followed the mountain ridge to Front Royal in an attempt to reach Washington.

Barringer piloted Richard Dupont's Albatross and Eaton the Falcon. Both gliders reached 6,500 feet altitude on Thursday. A message from Richard Dupont said that the Wilmington pilot and American record holder would arrive here tomorrow.

Labor Leaders Say NRA Has Missed Goal

Failed to Increase Buying Power or Reduce Idle, Is Charged.

creased 9.8 per cent; individual weekly wages, 6.4 per cent, and the cost of living, 6.3 per cent.

"This meant that the employes in these industries are at the same position regarding purchasing power as they held before the NRA," the committee commented.

The report finds also that minimum wages fixed in codes have been regarded by employers as maximum wages and that the wages of skilled workers accordingly have been reduced to compensate for increase to the unskilled.

The committee estimates that 10,500,000 people still are unemployed, although of these approximately 2,000,000 are cared for temporarily by the CWA and various Government construction projects.

Numerous codes are attacked in detail.

"Hours of work must be greatly reduced," the committee emphasizes.

The committee recommends that the NRA be reorganized in a way to recognize that "some action will be necessary for perhaps a long time to come."

It also urges that agricultural industries be brought under the NRA.

Reviewing other phases of the NRA it finds that the much publicized Section 7-a, which guarantees collective bargaining for labor, has brought about the "most cruel disillusion of the workers." Employers, the report finds, have rushed to form company unions which often have operated to give employes less instead of more freedom from collective action."

Building Trades Threat Is Put Up to Green

San Francisco, Sept. 30 (AP).—Upon President William Green apparently rested tonight the burden of solving the most bitter jurisdictional fight in the recent history of the American Federation of Labor.

Green, fearful lest the controversy in the building trades department grow to the point where it would overshadow the vital issues facing the federation, hurriedly arranged a series of last-minute "crucial" conferences in an effort to settle the dispute before the general convention opens tomorrow.

Some professed to see in the struggle a test of Green's administrative strength.

Others, however, discounted the suggestion that refusal of the building trades department to readmit the carpenters, bricklayers and electrical workers, international unions would be used as a basis for an attempt to oust Green from the federation presidency.

Threat to Harmony.

The building group's action was based on an asserted belief seating of delegates from the three "outcast" unions would disrupt harmony in the department. Lending strength to this belief were declarations from leaders of the three unions that the present administration of the department is not aggressive enough in its leadership and their asserted intentions of forcing the election of a new president and secretary.

Belief was widely expressed by delegates that Green, in order to prevent the fight spreading to the convention floor, has outlined a plan whereby the opposing factions can get together.

Outstanding figures in the A. F of L. privately advanced the opinion Green would suggest that the building trades department readmit the three unions, and that those organizations agree not to attempt to upset the department administration until the next general election

Green, however, declined to discuss the matter until after a meeting with the executive council and the opposing groups late today.

If a settlement is not reached tonight, Green has intimated the matter will be carried to the convention floor for a showdown. He has branded as illegal the action of the department in refusing to seat delegates of the carpenters, bricklayers and electrical workers after the department's executive council voted unanimously last June to accept the reaffiliations. The three unions withdrew from the department several years ago, although they have remained affiliated with the A. F. of L.

The building trades department at its convention here last week re-elected M. J. McDonough as its president for the next three years. Delegates explained, however, that if the three "outside" unions are readmitted, a new election could be called for.

The "regular" department leaders, headed by McDonough, and leaders of the three disputed unions, headed by William L. Hutcheson, international president of the carpenters' union, appeared at the same time today before the A. F. of L. executive council.

Previously each group had appeared separately to present its side.

Hutcheson stated the three "outcast" unions would have a total membership in the department of about 375,000. Four other international unions have threatened to withdraw from the department unless the three big unions are readmitted. The total membership of these seven organizations would be about 468,000, Hutcheson said, as compared to only 223,000 members that would still be left in the department.

New Picnic Park for Northeast Section

Coupled with the Eastern Avenue boulevard development, residents of the large section of the district surrounding McKinley Circle northeast, are soon to have a new picnic park of vast area. Workers on relief rolls, as many as 65 at a time, have been engaged in clearing the area of underbrush and otherwise improving it. The project is one that has been backed by Rhode Island Avenue Citizens Association.

Holdup a Fake, Police Charge

Gagged Youth, With Story of $100 Robbery, Held With Another.

Two youth were held for questioning by police las tnight, after one of them, an employe of the High Ice Cream Co., was found early yesterday bound and gagged in a rear room of the company's plant, 1804 Seventh street northwest.

Horton C. Callahan, 19, of the 1500 block of M street northwest, a clerk at the plant was found by a colored employe tied hand and fott and gagged with an old handkerchief. Callahan told police he lay helpless for five hours after a bandit robbed him of 'more than $100."

Callahan's story was checked by Detectives A. W. Smith and D. R. Fletcher. They said his wrists and ankles were tied by heavy rope and an old handkerchief was stuffed in his mouth. After questioning the youth at headquarters for several hours, the detectives arrested John Albert Carroll, 20, of the 900 block of H street northwest.

Callahan admitted, police said, that the holdup was "framed." He and Carroll, police quoted Callahas as saying, plotted to divide the money. Approximately $86, in a paper sack bearing the ice cream company's name, was recovered at Carroll's home, police declared.

Christian University Lifts Ban on Dancing

Fort Worth, Tex. (U.P.).—For the first time in its 70 years of existence, Texas Christian University this year will permit dancing—jazz dancing.

The school has permitted "promenades" for many years, but Texas Christian promenades were promenades in the strictest definition of the word—a walk.

Young men were permitted to walk to and fro with their partners under the scrutiny of stern chaperones. There was no dancing. And the only promenade each year, the freshmen prom, was held on the greensward in front of the library, not in a dance hall.

Green's Foes Bolt A. F. of L. To Stand Alone

Leader's California Strike Attitude 'Sabotage,' Is Charge.

San Francisco, Sept. 30 (AP).—Raising its voice against some of the policies and practices of President William Green and other leaders of the American Federation of Labor, a militant group within that organization moved here tonight to formulate a labor program of its own.

This group, known as the rank and file, called a mass meeting to be held tomorrow night, after the initial session of the federation's fifty-fourth annual convention.

Referring to Green's attitude toward the recent general strike here as "sabotage," the call for the meeting said his position "must not remain unchallenged."

Shortly before the mass walkout collapsed Green had said it never should have been attempted.

"The statements he made," said the rank and file call, "were eagerly snapped up by the ship owners to break the strike."

Criticism was leveled against State Federation of Labor officials because their convention did not protest against Green's attitude, and the statement asserted the rank and file never had been able to object through official union channels because State Federation officials had "choked" the avenues of expression.

Passage of the workers' unemployment and social insurance bill introduced in the last Congress by Representative Lundeen, Minnesota Farmer-Laborite, is sought by the rank and file. The bill would assure all unemployed workers and farmers an income comparable to average local wages, the cost to be borne by employers and the Government.

The rank and file is composed of nonofficer members of various unions. Some are delegates to the convention, others are not. The mass meeting was advertised as being under the auspices of the "A. F. of L. trade union committee for unemployment insurance and relief."

Postoffice Spy Galleries Have Signal System

Kansas City, Mo. (U.P.).—A new signaling device for the 48 lookout galleries of the new postoffice here resembles an airport on a dark night.

Small red lights glow in the unlighted corridors, indicating plug-in points for hand telephones carried by inspectors when they enter the galleries for observance of postal employes at work.

By telephone the inspector can communicate with the central office when he sees anything amiss in the handling of the mail.

The galleries are connected by secret corridors. The entire system covers 2 miles.

Treasury Lists Interest Saved For Its Critics

3 Weeks of Refinancing Effect $13,000,000 Economy, Is Report.

(Associated Press.)

As a partial answer to critics of New Deal monetary policies, Treasury experts calculated yesterday that in three weeks they have clipped about $13,000,000 off the annual interest the Government must pay on its public debt.

This was accomplished through a trade with persons who already held fourth Liberty Loan bonds bearing 4¼ per cent inerest. In exchange for those, the bondholders have agreed to take $293,000,000 in 10 to 12 year obligations bearing 3¼ per cent cent and $596,691,000 in 4-year notes carrying 2½ per cent.

Books Still Open.

The books on the 3¼'s are still open, so that any who have some of the $1,200,000,000 of called Liberty bonds still may offer to trade. The incentive, from the liberty bondholder's viewpoint, is to get a new Government obligation giving him interest instead of being paid off in cash on October 15.

The Government's objective is two-fold—first, to reduce its interest, and, second, to keep in the Treasury as much as possible of the $1,200,000,000 in cash which otherwish would be paid out.

The offerings to trade the liberties for 10-12-year obligations largely have come from individuals. They amount to less than half the $596,691,000 taken in exchange, chiefly by banks.

The choice of two obligations was provided, Treasury officials said, because it was recognized that many such institutions were anxious to convert part of their bulging government portfolio into shorter maturities.

In the expressed opinion of Treasury officials, including that of Morgenthau, the refinancing operation to date is a success.

They called attention to the fact that all but $10,000,000 of $524,000,000 1½ per cent certificates maturing September 15 and handled as part of the same operation had been refunded with two-year notes bearing the same interest.

Stand of Critics.

Critics of Administration financial policies, however, asserted that only the reception accorded the 3¼'s could be cited as illustrative of the favor in which Government securities are held by investors other than banks.

They said both issues of notes bore interest coupons attractive enough in comparison with outstanding similar maturities to make their acceptance virtually certain, inasmuch as they were held chiefly by financial institutions whose investment channels were limited.

Treasury officials, however, expect that a substantial additional amount will be offered for conversion before the books are closed. They would not say whether they would remain open until the October 15 call date.

Allotments of the four-year notes on which the books closed Monday, were made to Federal Reserve districts as follows:

Boston, $37,582,750; New York, $376,990,050; Philadelphia, $17,288,800; Cleveland $26,529,800; Richmond, $8,129,800; Atlanta, $3,553,050; Chicago, $64,146,900; St. Louis, $12,447,950; Minneapolis, $10,478,350; Kansas City, $11,959,000; Dallas, $6,827,750; San Francisco, $15,472,800; Treasury, $5,284,150.

Burning Liner Calls for Help

Coast Guard Ships Speed to Steamer Afire at Sea.

New York, Sept. 30 (AP).—The steamer Koenigstein, 150 miles off the coast of Nova Scotia, bound for New York from Antwerp, wirelessed Radiomarine Corporation today that a fire was burning in her hold, but that the blaze was believed under control. The ship's engines had been stopped, the message stated.

The steamer, operated by the Arnold Bernstein Line, is a twin-screw vessel, of 15,000 tons displacement. She is 459 feet long, with a beam of 59 feet and has five passenger decks.

The vessel, which entered the line's service in July for service between New York, Antwerp and Havre, was rebuilt recently and refurnished into a cabin class steamer. The ship carried several groups of "depressed dollar" tourists from Europe.

The ship, commanded by Capt. Ferdinand Kahlbetzer, is due in New York Tuesday.

Three Coast Guard vessels were ordered to proceed at once to the Koenigstein. The Tampa, which brought ashore the officers of the burning Morro Castle, left her pier at Stapleton, Staten Island.

The Champlain and the Sebago, at sea, shifted their positions at once and sped toward the vessel.

Dubora Will Fight Election of Hale

Waterville, Me., Sept. 30(AP).—Charging election practices "tantamount to fraud," F. Harold Dubord, apparently defeated Democratic candidate for United States Senator in the September 10 election, announced his intention tonight of contesting the reelection of Senator Fredericw Hale, Republican.

Returns compiled by the secretary of state indicated Hale's reelection by a plurality of 1,701 votes. Dubord made known his intention to challenge the result in letters to Secretary of State Robinson C. Tobey and Gov. Louis J. Brann.

Dubord informed the Governor that "thousands of voters throughout the State have been illegally disfranchised by Republican boards of registration because they had been recipients of Federal relief funds.

Plans for $2,075,000 Bridge, Drawn by Coed, 21, Accepted

Edith Reed, Undergraduate at Minnesota, Designs Nebraska Span.

Minneapolis, Sept. 30 (AP).—A 21-year-old University of Minnesota coed, who will not receive her degree in the engineering school until next June, was disclosed tonight as the designer of the plan accepted for the new $2,075,000 bridge to be constructed across the Missouri River at Omaha, Nebr.

She is Edith Reed, of Minneapolis, who is working her own way through the university, and who developed the plan while in bed recuperating from an automobile accident.

Many leading architects expressed amazement when it was learned the successful design was the creation of a woman, but probably the most surprised person was Miss Reed herself.

"I didn't even dare hope for such a thing," she said tonight.

Miss Reed entered the university five years ago with her mind set on being an architect. During the past summer she had worked on various jobs in department stores and with architectural companies to earn tuition money.

A contract for the bridge was awarded to the Minneapolis Bridge Co. here. The structure will be 6,200 feet long.

Schall Attacks Dill as Choice For Wire Board

In a letter to President Roosevelt, Senator Schall (Republican), Minnesota, yesterday demanded that the Executive inform the public whether Senator Dill (Democrat), Washington, will be appointed chairman of the new Communications Commission, says the Associated Press.

Dill is chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, which handled the communications bill. He is not seeking reelection, but announced he was retiring to provide for his future.

"It is ," the Minnesotan wrote, in part, "in connection with your present plan to make Senator Clarence C. Dill chairman of the Communications Commission upon his retirement from the Senate, on January 1 next, that I address you this letter.

"In taking this liberty of making public your plans I do so because Senator Dill is engaged at the present moment in organizing a telegraphic news agency, which will be operated under Government censorship and in competition with the Associated Press, the Hearst News Service and the United Press.

"Of course, you and the public are well aware of the fact that the office of chairman of the Communications Commission has been left vacant, and I have been advised that Senator Will is retiring from the Senate only because he is to be appointed to this post by you.

"If this is not true, and you are not backing Senator Dill in the organization of this news service, it seems to me you should make public your opposition to his plan."

Legenza, Mais Believed Still in Richmond; Roads Guarded.

machine gun. Police were certain they had outside aid and were proceeding on the belief that they were supplied with additional arms.

Mrs. Fontaine Guarded.

Legenza and Mais were members of the notorious tri-State gang of criminals which terrorized the Middle Atlantic States and which was headed by "Big George" Phillips, slain by Washington police. Arthur Misunas, confessed member of the gang and participant in the holdup murder here, who turned State's evidence in their trials, was under heavy guard in Henrico County Jail, as police feared reprisals.

Washington police also ordered a guard around Mrs. Leonora Fontaine, friend of the slain gang leader, who testified here that Mais shot and wounded her because she "knew too much." She later gave authorities much information used in the conviction of Mais and Legenza. Police would not reveal her whereabouts.

Legenza, who has been called "stir crazy," admitted in his trial that burglary was his "profession" and boasted of his robberies.

Mais, whose mother said he had been a bootlegger, is suffering at present from six slugs fired into his back by Baltimore police.

Officers here were informed that Mais was staggering yesterday as he ran from the jail, and that he probably had been struck by police bullets. A recess had to be taken one day during his trial, because of his suffering from his wounds, and police were inclined to blame the old wounds for the supposed staggering.

Safety Electric Switch Guards Falling Planes

London (AP).—A new safety switch, designed to disconnect all electric circuits in an airplane in a crash, has been produced here. Strong springs of the switch are controlled by a pendulum, which is unaffected by the ordinary maneuvers of an airplane or even bumpy landings, but which releases the springs if there is impact strong enough to damage the plane.

A version of the switch is already in use in automobiles, though in this case the circuits are disconnected if a car overturns or tilts to an agle of 45 degrees.

Radio Burglar Alarm To Frighten Intruders

London (U.P.).—A woman has just paid $250 for a radiophone—to play one record only.

When it is played, a dog's bark is heard, followed by a man's cry of "Who's there?".

The purchaser is a widow, living with an elderly maid in a district which has had an epidemic of burglaries.

With her new radiophone loudspeakers will be installed in every room, the radiophone will be connected with "invisible light" alarms across each window.

Radio Waves and Ripples

By George M. Adams, Jr.

A BEWILDERING but pleasing array of top-notch radio fare returns with a gusty, fall season blast today on major networks. It's a "red letter" day and there are more first broadcasts, return engagements and premieres than on any previous day of the waning year.

Space doesn't permit full comment on them all. You'll recognize old favorites, several new features and welcome the high quality of most of them. They line up about like this:

C. B. S.—5 p. m., premiere, "Og, Son of Fire," juvenile adventure stories; 5:15 p. m., return of "Skippy," juvenile adventures; 6:30 p. m., return of "The Shadow," mystery thriller; 7 p. m., return of Myrt and Marge, episodes of backstage life; 8:30 p. m., John Charles Thomas, operatic barytone, guest artist of Atwater Kent hour; 9 p. m., return engagement of Rosa Ponselle, operatic contralto, with Andre Kostelanetz's orchestra; 10:45 p. m., "Doctors, Dollars and Disease," discussions by prominent medical men of mutual interests of public and profession.

N. B. C.—1:45 p. m. (WMAL), great composers program with Frank Black's N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra; 5:15 p. m. (WRC), Tom Mix adeventures; 5:45 p. m. (WRC), Capt. Tim Healy's Stamp Club; 7:15 p. m. (WMAL), Plantation Echoes, with Mildred Bailey and Willard Robison's Orchestra; 7:30 p. m. (WRC), Al Bernard and Paul Dumont's Minstrel Show; 7:30 p. m. (WMAL), Red Davis sketches with Burgess Meredith; 7:45 p. m. (WMAL), Dangerous Paradise, romantic series with Elsie Hitz and Nick Dawson.

• • • •

THIS department picks as the high spots of the above, John Charles Thomas, Rose Ponselle, Myrt and Marge, the Great Composers symphony series, and the "Red Davis" sketches. Here's why:

Thomas will sing the prologue from Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci," a thrilling event every time it's heard; "When I Was a Lad," from "Pinafore;" Home on the Range" and a group from "Flying Down to Rio," and "Roberta."

Ponselle will sing "I Love You Truly," "Homing," "Batti Batti," from the opera "Don Giovanni," and the "Cuckoo Clock" by Grant-Schaefer. It is Kostelanetz's plan to maintain the same general type on pattern on each of his three weekly half hours. The Monday spot will be "tango night;" the Wednesday broadcast will present orchestra and singers in "Syncopated History" and the Saturday programs will embrace the lightness of spirit characteristic of that evening of the week.

It's Myrt and Marge's fourth season. And their back-stage drama contains the same zest as their own warm personalities . . . remember their appearance locally at the Fox stage?

Such celebrated artists as Michel Piastro, of the New York Philharmonic; Frank Sheridan, pianist; the Gordon String Quartet, will brighten the Great Composers program. Featuring fine music of less known works of great composers, the symphony series have the indorsement of Walter Damrosch and the direction of Frank Black. The appeal is to the advanced music lover and unusual combinations of instruments will be employed.

While "Red Davis" has been heard before, its appearance this time is made interesting through the air debut of Burgess Meredith, young, active Broadway star, picked by N. B. C. for his brilliant work in "She Loves Me Not."

YOU certainly shouldn't take a cue from Koko's song "It Never Will Be Missed" and fail to tune in on the Roadsiders tomorrow night when they air "Uncle Tom's Cabin," that pristine favorite of bloodhounds, auction blocks, stinging whips and ice cakes.

The same actors and actresses who regaled you with the "Drunkard," "The Tavern" and "Murder in the Red Barn" from their theater at Halpine, Md., will enact the throes of slavedom for WMAL from 10:20 to 11 p. m.

GUIDING curious tourists through the labyrinthine maze of N. B. C.'s gigantic Radio City was the path that led John Nolty Laing, WRC's newest and youngest announcer, through the portals of the air waves into success.

Wearing a "monkey jacket," a bright smile and knowing when to say, "Yes, sir; this way, please," the lad took upwards of 2,000 persons here and there. But he got "thoroughly disgusted with wearing a uniform" and took to writing continuity and announcing for a Newark, N. J., station. His first love, N. B. C., stayed with him. So bucking up courage he applied there for an audition, took a program on the networks. Kenneth Berkeley, of WRC, heard him and "that's all there was to it," says young Mr. Laing, who is 20 years old and from Brooklyn, N. Y.

ONE of the oldest "name" orchestra leaders in the baton-bending field, Don Bestor will continue the current epidemic for radio bands by bringing his N. B. C. musicians to the Earle stage this Friday. His association with popular dance music goes back to 1922, when KDKA, Pittsburgh, was heard only within a radius of 20 miles. "I Hate to Say Good-By," one of Bestor's newest tunes, is fast becoming hummed about.

DAVE HUNNICUTT, whose "Doctor of the Blues" goes on thrice weekly starting today from WRC at 1:15 p. m., says that it's things like his songs, patter and foolishness that "makes people warn their neighbors to turn their radios down." Dave wasn't the originator of the local curfew movement, asking people to lower volume when the lights are low, but he is thoroughly in sympathy with whoever did.

German Lindbergh Grilling Resumed

Stories of Suspect's Kin Fail to Conform.

Leipzig, Germany, Sept. 30 (AP).—Arthur Johnson, New York detective, kept Hannah Fisch and her brother, Pinkus, all day at police headquarters today, continuing his questions concerning their brother, the late Isidor Fisch.

Isidor, who died here last March, is the man who Bruno Richard Hauptmann said gave him the Lindbergh ransom money.

Johnson also questioned the mother of Henry Uhlig. She was said to have repeated her conviction that her son was innocent of any connection with the Lindbergh kidnap case. (Uhlig was released after questioning in New York.) Johnson said statements of Hannah Fisch failed to conform in some details with those of her brother, Pinkus.

Mais, Legenza Held Unlikely To Come Here

Burke Continues Heavy Guard at All City Gates, However.

City entrances remained under heavy guard last night as a mobilized Detective Bureau continued its "watchful waiting" for Walter Legenza, alias William Davis, and Robert Mais, condemned Richmond fugatives.

Although conceding it improbable that the escaped killers would reach Washington, Inspector Frank S. W. Burke said he "was taking no chances." Bridges and roads leading from Virginia will be patrolled indefinitely, he said.

Throughout yesterday picked squads of machine gunners and marksmen cruised in automobiles along "back woods" roads of nearby Arlington and Fairfax Counties. At four bridges, Highway Memorial, Key and Chain, armed detectives continued to stop and search all trucks and inter-State buses.

Motorists, riding in pleasure cars, were carefully scrutinized.

The "lookout" squads were personally supervised by Inspector Burke. He visited each detail several times yesterday and warned the men to keep alert and watchful.

"Take no chances—shoot to kill," were his orders.

A total of 42 trucks were stopped for inspection at Key Bridge during a 3-hour period yesterday. Only one driver said he had been halted previously. Many of the trucks were en route to Washington from Virginia counties south of Richmond, and had traveled without once being stopped.

Three Posts Filled By Esperanto Group

Maximilian M. Vilareal, of the office of the Philippine resident commission, has been named publicity director for the Esperanto Association of North America. Villareal's term as director of the propaganda committee for the association expired yesterday and he was immediately appointed to the new post.

Two other newly organized posts of the association are national organizer, to which Thomas F. Gaines, of New York and Washington, has been named, and the chairman of linguistic research, to which Fenton Stanciff, of Akron, Ohio, has been appointed.

Extra Service Added In Novena Schedule

An extra service has been added to the schedule of Novena services in honor of Our Lady of the Miraculous Medal at St. Mary's Church, on Fifth street northwest, effective today, church officials announced yesterday.

Services will be held at 8:30 p. m. in addition to the 5 p. m. and 7:30 p. m. rites.

Grocery Safe Broken, Thieves Get $79 Loot

Intruders broke into a Sanitary grocery at 3329 M street northwest early yesterday, smashed open a small safe, took $40, cartons of cigarettes and escaped, police were told.

Vernon Iden, manager of the store, said heavy screening on a rear window had been ripped open. The loss was estimated at $79.

Stock Control Body Takes Power by Banning 10 Issues

will be prohibited on any of the 24 registered exchanges.

Twelve exchanges have been granted a 60-day exemption from registration pending further studies.

One, the New York Mining Exchange of New Jersey, has been exempted until the conclusion of a hearing begun Saturday on its qualifications. The hearing will be resumed Thursday.

Plans to Act Gradually.

The commission has decided to put the 1934 stock exchange control act into effect gradually "in order that the business world may accommodate its course of dealing to the requirements of law with a minimum of friction and inconvenience."

Accordingly, it has postponed until midnight, October 14, the effective date of the 25 to 45 per cent marginal requirements fixed by the Federal Reserve Board, the prohibition against trading in any security whether registered or not, except those to which the commission has refused registration, and the restrictions on borrowing by brokers and dealers.

Among the provisions which will become operative today are those penalizing manipulation of security prices through pools and other similar methods, restricting the activities of specialists, penalizing short selling by officers or directors of the issuing company or any owner of more than 10 per cent of any security, and granting purchasers relying on statements filed with the commission civil remedies against those responsible for any misinformation contained therein.

"Four Bottles Helped Me"

Feels Fine . . . Never Tired

"My four children were born close together. I lived on a farm with lots of work to do and I got all rundown so I could hardly go. Four bottles of your Vegetable Compound helped me wonderfully. Twice since then I had to take several bottles to regulate and strengthen me. I take care of my house and children, do all my laundry and do home work for a garment factory, and I feel fine and never get tired. I have also used the Sanative Wash and it relieved my trouble."—Mrs. Chas. S. Pittinger, 55 Conklin Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

machine gun. Police were certain they had outside aid and were proceeding on the belief that they were supplied with additional arms.

Mrs. Fontaine Guarded.

Legenza and Mais were members of the notorious tri-State gang of criminals which terrorized the Middle Atlantic States and which was headed by "Big George" Phillips, slain by Washington police. Arthur Misunas, confessed member of the gang and participant in the holdup murder here, who turned State's evidence in their trials, was under heavy guard in Henrico County Jail, as police feared reprisals.

Washington police also ordered a guard around Mrs. Leonora Fontaine, friend of the slain gang leader, who testified here that Mais shot and wounded her because she "knew too much." She later gave authorities much information used in the conviction of Mais and Legenza. Police would not reveal her whereabouts.

Legenza, who has been called "stir crazy;" admitted in his trial that burglary was his "profession" and boasted of his robberies.

Mais, whose mother said he had been a bootlegger, is suffering at present from six slugs fired into his back by Baltimore police.

Officers here were informed that Mais was staggering yesterday as he ran from the jail, and that he probably had been struck by police bullets. A recess had to be taken one day during his trial, because of his suffering from his wounds, and police were inclined to blame the old wounds for the supposed staggering.

Safety Electric Switch Guards Falling Planes

London (AP).—A new safety switch, designed to disconnect all electric circuits in an airplane in a crash, has been produced here. Strong springs of the switch are controlled by a pendulum, which is unaffected by the ordinary maneuvers of an airplane or even bumpy landings, but which releases the springs if there is impact strong enough to damage the plane.

A version of the switch is already in use in automobiles, though in this case the circuits are disconnected if a car overturns or tilts to an agle of 45 degrees.

Radio Burglar Alarm To Frighten Intruders

London (U.P.).—A woman has just paid $250 for a radiophone—to play one record only.

When it is played, a dog's bark is heard, followed by a man's cry of "Who's there?"

The purchaser is a widow, living with an elderly maid in a district which has had an epidemic of burglaries.

With her new radiophone loudspeakers will be installed in every room, the radiophone will be connected with "invisible light" alarms across each window.

Radio Waves and Ripples

By George M. Adams, Jr.

A BEWILDERING but pleasing array of top-notch radio fare returns with a gusty, fall season blast today on major networks. It's a "red letter" day and there are more first broadcasts, return engagements and premieres than on any previous day of the waning year.

Space doesn't permit full comment on them all. You'll recognize old favorites, several new features and welcome the high quality of most of them. They line up about like this:

C. B. S.—5 p. m., premiere, "Og, Son of Fire," juvenile adventure stories; 5:15 p. m., return of "Skippy," juvenile adventures; 6:30 p. m., return of "The Shadow," mystery thriller; 7 p. m., return of Myrt and Marge, episodes of backstage life; 8:30 p. m., John Charles Thomas, operatic barytone, guest artist of Atwater Kent hour; 9 p. m., return engagement of Rosa Ponselle, operatic contralto, with Andre Kostelanetz's orchestra; 10:45 p. m., "Doctors, Dollars and Disease," discussions by prominent medical men of mutual interests of public and profession.

N. B. C.—1:45 p. m. (WMAL), great composers program with Frank Black's N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra; 5:15 p. m. (WRC), Tom Mix adeventures; 5:45 p. m. (WRC), Capt. Tim Healy's Stamp Club; 7:15 p. m. (WMAL), Plantation Echoes, with Mildred Bailey and Willard Robison's Orchestra; 7:30 p. m. (WRC), Al Bernard and Paul Dumont's Minstrel Show; 7:30 p. m. (WMAL), Red Davis sketches with Burgess Meredith; 7:45 p. m. (WMAL), Dangerous Paradise, romantic series with Elsie Hitz and Nick Dawson.

• • • •

THIS department picks as the high spots of the above, John Charles Thomas, Rose Ponselle, Myrt and Marge, the Great Composers symphony series, and the "Red Davis" sketches. Here's why:

Thomas will sing the prologue from Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci," a thrilling event every time it's heard; "When I Was a Lad," from "Pinafore;" Home on the Range" and a group from "Flying Down to Rio," and "Roberta."

Ponselle will sing "I Love You Truly," "Homing," "Batti Batti," from the opera "Don Giovanni," and the "Cuckoo Clock" by Grant-Schaefer. It is Kostelanetz's plan to maintain the same general type on pattern on each of his three weekly half hours. The Monday spot will be "tango night;" the Wednesday broadcast will present orchestra and singers in "Syncopated History" and the Saturday programs will embrace the lightness of spirit characteristic of that evening of the week.

It's Myrt and Marge's fourth season. And their back-stage drama contains the same zest as their own warm personalities . . . remember their appearance locally at the Fox stage?

Such celebrated artists as Michel Piastro, of the New York Philharmonic; Frank Sheridan, pianist; the Gordon String Quartet, will brighten the Great Composers program. Featuring fine music of less known works of great composers, the symphony series have the indorsement of Walter Damrosch and the direction of Frank Black. The appeal is to the advanced music lover and unusual combinations of instruments will be employed.

While "Red Davis" has been heard before, its appearance this time is made interesting through the air debut of Burgess Meredith, young, active Broadway star, picked by N. B. C. for his brilliant work in "She Loves Me Not."

YOU certainly shouldn't take a cue from Kelso's song "It Never Will Be Missed" and fail to tune in on the Roadsiders tomorrow night when they air "Uncle Tom's Cabin," that pristine favorite of bloodhounds, auction blocks, stinging whips and ice cakes.

The same actors and actresses who regaled you with the "Drunkard," "The Tavern" and "Murder in the Red Barn" from their theater at Halpine, Md., will enact the throes of slavedom for WMAL from 10:20 to 11 p. m.

GUIDING curious tourists through the labyrinthine maze of N. B. C.'s gigantic Radio City was the path that led John Nolty Laing, WRC's newest and youngest announcer, through the portals of the air waves into success.

Wearing a "monkey jacket," a bright smile and knowing when to say, "Yes, sir; this way, please," the lad took upwards of 2,000 persons here and there. But he got "thoroughly disgusted with wearing a uniform" and took to writing continuity and announcing for a Newark, N. J., station. His first love, N. B. C., stayed with him. So bucking up courage he applied there for an audition, took a program on the networks. Kenneth Berkeley, of WRC, heard him and "that's all there was to it," says young Mr. Laing, who is 20 years old and from Brooklyn, N. Y.

ONE of the oldest "name" orchestra leaders in the baton-bending field, Don Bestor will continue the current epidemic for radio bands by bringing his N. B. C. musicians to the Earle stage this Friday. His association with popular dance music goes back to 1922, when KDKA, Pittsburgh, was heard only within a radius of 20 miles. "I Hate to Say Good-By," one of Bestor's newest tunes, is fast becoming hummed about.

DAVE HUNNICUTT, whose "Doctor of the Blues" goes on thrice weekly starting today from WRC at 1:15 p. m., says that it's things like his songs, patter and foolishness that "makes people warn their neighbors to turn their radios down." Dave wasn't the originator of the local curfew movement, asking people to lower volume when the lights are low, but he is thoroughly in sympathy with whoever did.

German Lindbergh Grilling Resumed

Stories of Suspect's Kin Fail to Conform.

Leipzig, Germany, Sept. 30 (AP).—Arthur Johnson, New York detective, kept Hannah Fisch and her brother, Pinkus, all day at police headquarters today, continuing his questions concerning their brother, the late Isidor Fisch.

Isidor, who died here last March, is the man who Bruno Richard Hauptmann said gave him the Lindbergh ransom money.

Johnson also questioned the mother of Henry Uhlig. She was said to have repeated her conviction that her son was innocent of any connection with the Lindbergh kidnap case. (Uhlig was released after questioning in New York.) Johnson said statements of Hannah Fisch failed to conform in some details with those of her brother, Pinkus.

Mais, Legenza Held Unlikely To Come Here

Burke Continues Heavy Guard at All City Gates, However.

City entrances remained under heavy guard last night as a mobilized Detective Bureau continued its "watchful waiting" for Walter Legenza, alias William Davis, and Robert Mais, condemned Richmond fugatives.

Although conceding it improbable that the escaped killers would reach Washington, Inspector Frank S. W. Burke said he "was taking no chances." Bridges and roads leading from Virginia will be patrolled indefinitely, he said.

Throughout yesterday picked squads of machine gunners and marksmen cruised in automobiles along "back woods" roads of nearby Arlington and Fairfax Counties. At four bridges, Highway Memorial, Key and Chain, armed detectives continued to stop and search all trucks and inter-State buses.

Motorists, riding in pleasure cars, were carefully scrutinized.

The "lookout" squads were personally supervised by Inspector Burke. He visited each detail several times yesterday and warned the men to keep alert and watchful. "Take no chances—shoot to kill," were his orders.

A total of 42 trucks were stopped for inspection at Key Bridge during a 3-hour period yesterday. Only one driver said he had been halted previously. Many of the trucks were en route to Washington from Virginia counties south of Richmond, and had traveled without once being stopped.

Three Posts Filled By Esperanto Group

Maximilian M. Vilareal, of the office of the Philippine resident commission, has been named publicity director for the Esperanto Association of North America. Villareal's term as director of the propaganda committee for the association expired yesterday and he was immediately appointed to the new post.

Two other newly organized posts of the association are national organizer, to which Thomas F. Gaines, of New York and Washington, has been named, and the chairman of linguistic research, to which Fenton Stanciff, of Akron, Ohio, has been appointed.

Grocery Safe Broken, Thieves Get $79 Loot

Intruders broke into a Sanitary grocery at 3329 M street northwest early yesterday, smashed open a small safe, took $40, cartons of cigarettes and escaped, police were told.

Vernon Iden, manager of the store, said heavy screening on a rear window had been ripped open. The loss was estimated at $79.

"Four Bottles Helped Me"

Feels Fine . . . Never Tired

"My four children were born close together. I lived on a farm with lots of work to do and I got all rundown so I could hardly go. Four bottles of your Vegetable Compound helped me wonderfully. Twice since then I had to take several bottles to regulate and strengthen me. I take care of my house and children, do all my laundry and do home work for a garment factory, and I feel fine and never get tired. I have also used the Sanative Wash and it relieved my trouble."—Mrs. Chas. S. Pittinger, 55 Conklin Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Lewis-Zihlman Congress Race Will Be Close

Maryland's Most Ardent 'New Deal' Champion May Be Unseated.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Of the sitting six Democratic members of the House of Representatives from Maryland, only Representative David J. Lewis, of the Sixth or Western Maryland District, is in any danger of being defeated this fall, it is generally agreed by observers of the Maryland political situation.

Singularly enough, it is the Congressman from Maryland, who is the the most ardent supporter of the "new deal," whose political philosophy more closely coincides with that of President Roosevelt, and who has a deeper interest in social legislation than any of the group, who is in jeopardy of losing his seat.

But Mr. Lewis' difficult situation does not arise from his support of the "new deal." In fact, if he is re-elected it will be chiefly because of his enthusiasm for the "new deal" and the enthusiasm for it of the many Republicans who work in the mines, the factories and on the farms of the Western Maryland District.

Incidentally, the managers of the "new deal" campaign just have become aware that the Congressional fight in the Western Maryland District may have National significance, chiefly because this district is at the doorstep of the Nation's Capital. The district comprises Montgomery, Frederick, Washington, Allegany and Garrett Counties.

Seek Aid for Lewis.

Mr. Lewis' friends believe that the Democratic National and Congressional Campaign Committees should give him special help because, they assert, his defeat would be broadcast by the Republicans as a repudiation of the New Deal by the neighbors of the Nation's Capital. Moreover Mr. Lewis' adherence to the progressive cause in politics goes back some 20 years or more.

The situation in which Mr. Lewis finds himself is that he is running in a rock-ribbed Republican district against former Representative Frederick N. Zihlman, who is known personally from one end of the district to the other and who, during 14 years in Congress representing that district, built himself a large following by doing favors for his constituents.

Starting out life as a glass blower, Mr. Zihlman became prominent in the trade union movement, serving many years ago as the president of the Maryland Federation of Labor and as president of the Allegany Trades Council. More recently he was the supreme dictator of the Loyal Order of Moose.

With that background and a genial hail-fellow-well-met personality, Mr. Zihlman makes a strong candidate. While in Congress he paid little attention to the statesmanship side of his job—although for years he served as chairman of the District of Columbia committee and was called the "Mayor of Washington." His chief concern was doing errands for his constituents, getting them jobs and writing them letters.

Mr. Zihlman perhaps had the most efficient letter-writing system ever tried on Capitol Hill. He had a card index of the birth dates of thousands of his constituents and annually he sent each of those listed a card of felicitation. His office staff kept tabs on births, deaths and marriages in the district and weekly hundreds of letters expressing congratulations or sympathy, as the case might be, left the Zihlman office for the Sixth District.

Lewis Was Miner.

On the other hand, Mr. Lewis is the only Democrat of the present generation who could carry this district. Deprived of an opportunity to attend school, he learned to read in Sunday school and at the age of 9 went to work in the coal mines. The story is told that he continued his education by studying during his half-hour luncheon period hundreds of feet underground by the light of his miner's lamp. Finally he became a lawyer and then entered Democratic politics.

He surprised everyon when in 190 he was elected State Senator from Allegany County, where the Republicans outnumbered the Democrats two to one. In 1910 he was elected to Congress, after being defeated two years previously. In 1912 he was reelected and in 1914 he defeated Mr. Zihlman, then State Senator. Two years latre Mr. Lewis was the Democratic nominee for the United States Senate but was defeated due to the treachery of a part of the Democratic machine in Baltimore. In that year Mr. Zihlman was first elected to Congress and held his seat until unhorsed by Mr. Lewis in 1930.

In the meanwhile former President Wilson named Mr. Lewis a member of the Federal Tariff Commission and he was one of the most respected members of that body. He retired, however, in 1925 rather that give President Calvin Coolidge an undated resignation as the price of a reappointment. In 1928 he tried to regain his seat in Congress, only to be caught in the Hoover landslide, which overwhelming reelected Mr. Zihlman.

Real Estate Inquiry.

When the 1930 campaign arrived Mr. Zihlman was under a cloud. He had been indicted by the Federal grand jury in connection with the F. H. Smith real etsate scandal here and had not been tried when he came up for reelection. Mr. Lewis won that year by 6,071 votes.

Subsequently the Government entered a nolle prosequi to the Zihlman indictment. In 1932 Mr. Zihlman decided to remain in private life, but this year he became a candidate and overwhelmingly won the Republican nomination against William A. Gunter, of Cumberland. Mr. Lewis was reelected in 1932.

During the last two years, it is contended in the western Maryland district, Mr. Lewis has been so concerned with legislation for labor and providing for socias security that he failed to take care of the demands made on him by his constituents in such matters as getting them jobs and straightening out their veterans status and the like.

Consequently, it is reported, he will lose many votes he received in previous years. It also is the opinion that the Wade minority faction in Washington County which has always supported Mr. Lewis will desert him this year because he gave the patronage in that county to the Lane faction.

On the other hand, he should do better than ever before in Montgomery County, where many Democrats brought here by the Roosevelt Administration have moved. A few years ago Mr. Zihlman received majorities in Montgomery although the Democrats dominate the county. If Mr. Lewis wins it wil be because of his support of the "New Deal" and the increase in Democratic votes in Montgomery County.

British Flag—On American Statehouse

The sight of a British flag flying over the colonial statehouse at Williamsburg, Va., has aroused concern on the part of some patriotic Americans. The flag, it is explained, is not the Union Jack of Great Britain, but a more ancient emblem, the Great Union. Above photo shows the Great Union flowing in the breeze. Beneath the emblem on the statehouse tower there is a British royal coat of arms.

Shrine Planned For Preacher By Methodists

Funds Are Being Raised to Buy Old Strawbridge Home in Maryland.

Mount Airy, Md., Sept. 30 (Spl.). The name of Robert Strawbridge, known as the pioneer preacher of American Methodism, will be perpetuated if a movement now under way by the three branches of the Methodist faith to acquire the old Strawbridge home in Carroll County is successful.

Funds to purchase the 30-acre tract of land at Sams Creek, near Mount Airy, and convert it into a Methodist shrine are now being raised through the efforts of the Strawbridge Shrine Association, headed by Dr. Albert Norman Ward, president of Western Maryland College, Westminster.

Other officers of the association include the following vice presidents, The Rev. John Paul Tyler, D. D., Edgar Nusbaum and former Senator George P. B. Englar, and secretary-treasurer, Dr. John M. Nicodemus, Walkersville, Md.

A pilgrimage to the site of the proposed shrine will conclude sessions of the Methodist Sesqui-Centennial, in Baltimore, October 10-14.

If plans of the Strawbridge Shrine Association are successful, the 30-acre farm on which the pioneer of Methodism in Maryland settled about 1760 will be acquired and converted into a Methodist retreat.

According to an article in a recent issue of the Methodist Protestant Recorder, official organ of the Methodist Protestant Church, "The Methodist Historical Society has established the authenticity of his home beyond question and ten years ago placed upon the front wall of this house a beautiful bronze tablet bearing this inscription: 'The birthplace and cradle of American Methodism. Here was organized the first Society of Methodists in America by the pioneer preacher of American Methodism.'"

Man Traps Hawk Barehanded But Is Badly Clawed

Winchester, Va., Sept. 30 (AP).—The life of a man who catches hawks with his bare hands is not without its trouble. To this A. F. Baker, a Hayfield farmer is testifying.

Baker catches hawks and other denizens of the woods with his hands. This week he has been nursing badly lacerated hands.

He was in the vicinity of Opequon. He heard some squirrels in a nearby woods. He went in that direction and spied a large chicken hawk in a small tree. He crept up behind, and grabbed the hawk by its feet, and then by the neck.

It clawed him badly before he killed the bird under the heel of his boot.

Danville Sees Tobacco Boom

Doubled Trading Volume Expected Today as Four Sales Open.

Danville, Va., Sept. 30 (Spl.).—With the launching of four sales tomorrow the Danville tobacco market is expected to double the volume of leaf moved daily on warehouse floors.

The market, while enjoying the highest prices in 15 years, has been handicapped through inability to clear the warehouse floors speedily because of maintaining only two sets of buyers.

The skyrocketing prices, however, have more than offset the comparatively small volume handled and have caused an upturn in local business.

During last week, the first of the season, the average was $32.32, a total of 1,855,461 pounds of weed being sold for $609,389.70, being nearly three times what tobacco brought on the opening days of last year.

Chain Gang Lacking Links

Staunton Decides to Try Prison Labor System, but Day of Start Finds Just One Man in Cell; Program Now Awaits Conviction.

Staunton, Va., Sept. 30 (Spl.).—Who was it that said something about the best-laid plans of mice and men going astray?

Tag this one on Staunton's city council.

After due and deliberate consideration, the city fathers decreed that the ancient chain-gang system should be resurrected. Announcements to this effect were given due publicity, a guard employed, and work picked out for the gang.

Came the day when the prisoners were to have been called from avocations of idleness to those of employment.

But there were no prisoners—at least not enough to form a chain gang. In fact, there was only one city prisoner behind the bars—and his time was to expire today.

So the city manager hastily announced that the system would not be put into operation until Tuesday—perhaps. James C. Ruff, the manager, put it this way:

"Saturday night is usually the night for jail refills, and we expect to have a gang ready by next Tuesday. There are several persons awaiting trial in police court, and there are others who will be placed in jail for back fines, if these are not paid immediately."

The threat of having to work out fines on the chain gang has had at least one good effect: Persons with whom the court has been lenient in the matter of extending credit have been coming forward promptly to pay up, Chief of Police W. P. Davis reports.

Stocks Join Bonds in Rise During Week

Losses Early in Month Returned by Gains; Trend Is Up.

New York, Sept. 30 (AP).—Financial markets this week continued to reflect some improvement.

In stocks and bonds, the recovery movement which set in around the middle of the month was prolonged. Most of the losses in the first half of the month have been recovered.

The share market, however, did not get up sufficient steam on its advance to outline a definitely upward trend. Speculative activity expanded a little, but a million-share day on the stock exchange remained merely a memory.

Improvement in sentiment in the financial district seemed to be generated in part by the belief Administration policies at Washington were being cast in a more conservative mold. The NRA reorganization, various expressions of Administration personalities recently and strength in the dollar were cited in support of that assumption.

Business Expansion Slow.

Moreover, business has been showing a little response to seasonal impulses. Expansion since Labor Day has been slow and chiefly in retail trade. Yet hopes have grown in Wall street that seasonal expansion tendencies would be accelerated. Sustained demand for goods by consumers would seem to warrant increase in production later on, as some Wall street analysts reason it.

Steel operations have risen to about 24 per cent of capacity, compared with an operating rate of about 18 per cent at the start of the month, according to estimates of the American Iron and Steel Institute. Railroad carloadings failed to show the gains expected for this season, but mirror a fairly steady trend in traffic movement.

Automobile production and sales have been slackening in line with expectations. Termination of the textile strike raised hopes for a broadening of the upturn and returns from the Government's campaign to encourage building and home renovation held a promise of improvement in demand for building materials.

Mainstay of Business.

But the mainstay of the business structure continued to be retail trade, although recent gains were pared somewhat by unfavorable weather in some sections. Heavy industry, dependent largely upon the flow of capital into investment channels, remained stagnant, except for the small pick-up in steel.

A further advance in stocks, with most of the list participating, carried the market within easy distance of the levels attained on the August rally. Rails and utilities made fair progress in contrast with their recent tendency to lag behind in industrials. Traders have become more friendly toward those groups since inflation talk began to die down.

While grains held in a narrow range, actively traded commodities were inclined to sag slowly. The moody index of spot commodity prices has been moving lower gradually since the summer advance in commodities flattened out late in August.

British Trade Continues Good; Uncertainties Handicap Europe

Premier Doumergue Says France Is Facing Grave Problems, Despite Balanced Budget Germany Wrestles With Changes Impending Imports Control.

New York, Sept. 30.—Cables and wireless dispatches to Business Week give the following survey of business abroad for the week ending yesterday:

London (cable).—"The tone of British business is good, with the result that funds are continuing to move into industrial shares. Volume business, however, is still small compared with totals five years ago. As a result the stock exchange has voted definitely not to open on Saturdays despite the strong urging of a small group of traders.

"There are other signs of improvement. Automobile registrations in July totaled 29,900, compared with 26,400 in July, 1933. In the last 10 months, automobile registrations have advanced 22½ per cent over the previous corresponding period. Tourists are visiting Great Britain in larger numbers. For the first eight months of this year the total was 16,000 greater than in the same period last year.

"The annual building exhibition has attracted more than normal interest this year because of the building drive by both national and local authorities. There are 333 exhibitors. Steel is outstanding."

Doumergue on Radio.

Paris (wireless).—"Frenchmen devoted one evening this week to their radios. Speaking from Paris, Premier Doumergue held all attention.

"France, declared the premier, faces critical problems this fall. Despite the balanced budget (many question the reality of this contention), and the economies which are supposed to reduce the cost of living (these have been only partially successful so far and have made but a small dent on extremely high living costs in the cities), the franc is threatened with devaluation. Not only may its position be weakened by other members of the gold bloc finding it impossible to cling to their position, but within France there is a growing group demanding a cheaper franc. The premier ignored these protests of the opposition and declared that his government was pledged to hold the franc at its present value.

"Real problem in the eyes of the premier is the political threat from within the country. He spoke definitely of both Communists and Socialists. He asked the country for power to change the constitution so that a premier could go straight to the people when a majority in the chamber of deputies disagrees.

"Frenchmen trudged off to work the next morning not quite sure of the significance of all that they heard. Only a few realized that Premier Doumergue's demands, if they are accepted by the French people, will mean some of the most radical changes the country has experienced since the founding of the Republic. There are many who are unwilling to give up this much power to one man, despite the examples in Rome, Moscow, Berlin, and Washington of 'authority vested in one man.'

Treasury Issue Goes Well.

"Despite the continued weakness of government bonds on the Bourse, the new treasury issue is going well. Contrary to earlier expectations, based on the bad reception which the July issue received, the current issue may bring in sufficient subscriptions to ease the loan situation for some time.

"Exports in August were 3 per cent above the July figure, and imports were down to 2 per cent, but the net change is neglible and is still not healthy. There is some improvement in the northern textile regions, but it is of small proportions. Alsatian potash sales are 10 per cent above 1933."

Berlin (wireless).—"First importance is attached to the working of the new import program but it is to soon yet to know how well it is functioning. Without doubt there will be a congestion of applications due as much to bureaucratic inefficiency as to the protests of neighboring countries that it violates the clearing arrangements they had made with Germany previously. Individual industries are desperately trying to work out their own barter deals with suppliers of their raw materials, but only a small percentage of them will be able to make any agreements in the short time at their disposal before they will need to replenish stocks.

"Industrial activity continues at steady levels, but there is fear of a fall recession at home, particularly if the import restrictions begin to retard business and reduce employment.

"Berlin's compromise with British textile interests concerning payments on deliveries at Hamburg is evidence that the country dreads any open rupture with good customers. Other neighbors may force similar adjustments which can go a long way to defeat the purpose of the import ban.

"Within the last year the Nazis have issued [illegible] than 30 decrees prohibiting [illegible] industrial plants or the ex[illegible] existing ones. Suppressio[illegible]s capacity' in Germany was [illegible] official motive. Business affected ranged from steel tubes and neckties, including chain stores.

"Banks have most recently come under the ban. No 'bank control board' has yet been created, but Berlin expects one eventually. Meanwhile, the government and the Reichsbank have decided that between now and the end of 1936 no new banks or credit institutions are to be allowed. Before this period expires, it is expected that some kind of complete licensing system will be established."

Vreelands Return To Apartment Here

She Was Before Marriage Miss Marian Jefferson.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Vreeland have returned to their apartment on Sixteenth street after spending the late summer in Connecticut where their marriage took place in July.

Mrs. Vreeland is the former Miss Marian Jefferson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Jefferson, and granddaughter of the late Joseph Jefferson, famous on the American stage for many years.

Mr. Vreeland has been making his home in Washington for the last two years having come from his former home in New York. Mr. Vreeland was in Washington a number of years ago as one of the legal advisors at the State department.

Bank Clearings Carried Below Level of 1933

Reduction in New York City Blamed for Drop in Total.

New York, Sept. 30.—The report of bank clearings again is somewhat mixed, except that the amounts continued higher at many important outside points. The total for the 22 leading cities in the United States for the week ended Wednesday, September 26, as reported by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., was $4,193,115,000, against $4,254,634,000 for the same week of last year, a loss of 1.4 per cent. This contrasts with an increase of 4.9 per cent in the previous week. At New York City, clearings this week were $2,671,760,000, a reduction of 7.8 per cent, while the aggregate for centers outside of New York of $1,521,355,000 was 12.1 per cent higher.

New York City and Boston were the only centers that showed decreases of consequence. Financial settlements influence bank operations to a considerable degree at both of these cities, and such movements have been greatly curtailed in both years. Gains this year have been exceptionally heavy in the West and the South, where banking operations were greatly restricted for most of last year. Increases the past week were notably large at Philadelphia, Buffalo, Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Baltimore, Atlanta, Richmond, Louisville, Dallas, San Francisco, and Portland. Clearings this week were lower by $670,242,000 than those of the preceding week, while for the same two weeks of last year the reduction was $381,154,000.

Figures at leading centers, compared with those of last year, are printed herewith; also, daily bank clearings each month for the year to date:

Sweden Called Leader in Rise To Prosperity

Government Will Redeem Remainder of Outstanding Gold Bonds.

New York, Sept. 30.—Visible evidence of the ability of the Kingdom of Sweden to lead in recovery from the world-wide depression and to solve the problems of national economy through a "managed currency" is offered in the announcement that the national debt office (Riksgaldskontoret) will redeem on November 1 all of the remaining outstanding bonds of the $30,000,000 30-year 5½ per cent gold bonds floated here by a group headed by the National City Co. in 1924. While providing for the unemployed on a modified dole system, the government has nevertheless been able to keep its expenditures within judicious bounds and to continue to reduce the national debt. Early this year $16,791,000 of the $30,000,000 bond issue were converted into kroner bonds. The bonds have ranged between a low of 102 and a high of 109¾ during the current year.

The bonds will be redeemed at 100 per cent of the principal and the holders are requested to present them, together with all coupons appertaining thereto maturing after November 1, 1934, at the head office of the National City Bank of New York, fiscal agent of the loan. After this redemption date the bonds will cease to bear interest. The national debt office of the Kingdom of Sweden has offered to purchase such bonds through the National City Bank, fiscal agent, on and after October 1, at the face amount thereof in dollars with interest up to November 1, 1934, the date of redemption.

Wall Street Briefs

New York, Sept. 30 (AP).—The trend of manufacturing activity was downward in August, according to data from 25 manufacturing activities that report to the National Industrial Conference Board. This trend, said the board, was contrary to the usual slight pick-up in August which generally occurs after the seasonal declines of the early summer months. The number of wage earners employed in August was 1.6 per cent less than in July, total man-hours worked declined 3.4 per cent and pay rolls 3.3 per cent, according to the board.

An increase of 30 per cent in passenger traffic and 130 per cent in express shipments during the first eight months of this year over the corresponding period of 1933 was reported by United Air Lines. Despite the increase in passenger and express business, the company reported its gross income as "substantially less" than a year ago owing to the reduced number of schedules in which mail is now being carried under the temporary mail contracts.

Joseph P. Kennedy, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission and Leon A. Henderson, chief of the Division of Research and Planning of the NRA, are among the speakers scheduled to address the annual convention of the American Society of Certified Accountants At Atlantic City on October 1-4.

Bonnell W. Clark has been appointed vice president and general manager of the Westinghouse Electric Supply Co. H. N. Cansman and R. J. Holterman were elected vice presidents. The company is a subsidiary of Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing.

Directors of the Edison Electric Illuminating Co. of Boston have voted to call for payment November 2 at par the $20,000,000 three-year 5 per cent notes, due May 2 1935, with proceeds of new issues of similar amount bearing lower interest rates.

A special meeting of stockholders of the McKinney Steel Holding Co. has been called for October 25 to vote on the merger of the Corrigan-McKinney Steel Co. with the Republic Steel Corporation.

West's Trade Continues Rise

New York, Sept. 30.—For the eighth consecutive month of 1934, general business conditions in the Far West show improvement over the corresponding months of 1933, according to the Bank of America index of Far Western business for August. The index stands at 65.8, which is nearly a 6 per cent gain over the corresponding month last year. The preliminary August, 1934, index is 1.4 points lower than the revised July index.

This compares with a decrease of 1.8 points from July to August, 1933, a decrease of 2.7 from July to August, 1932, and a decline of 5.9 points in the same period in 1931. Retail sales and bank debits for the Far West show substantial gains over 1933, the Pacific Coast branch banking organization reports. Aggregate dollar volume of 89 reporting retail establishments increased 5 per cent in August over the corresponding month last year.

Twenty-seven cities of the Far West reported bank debits totaling $2,078,789,000 during August. This is a gain of 12.9 per cent over the same month a year ago and a 16.2 per cent increase over August, 1932.

Cotton Prices Register New Low Ground

Liquidation and Southern Selling Are Blamed for Decline.

New York, Sept. 30 (AP).—Cotton lost more than one-half cent per pound additional during the past week, registering further new lows for the season under liquidation and Southern hedge selling owing to favorable weather for harvesting and growth of late cotton, poor demand for spot cotton and cotton textiles, and uncertainties in the general business situation.

Aside from slight technical rallies from time to time the trend was generally lower throughout the week and December eased from 12.90 at the close of the previous week to 12.37, closing tonight at 12.38, representing a loss of 52 points for the week.

October liquidation prior to first notice day last Tuesday accounted for some of the earlier pressure on the market, and the issuance of notices representing 32,100 bales on that day accounted for additional selling. However, after this pressure had let up, the market displayed little or no rallying power.

Except for rains and cloudiness in northeastern portions, the cotton belt experienced another generally favorable week for picking and the growth of late bolls.

Texas is said to have some prospects of a top crop, dependent partly on the date of killing frost. Hopefulness for amicable settlement of textile labor disputes heightened after appointment by the President of his special textile labor relations board.

10-1-34

Shoeless Joe Jackson, one of the greatest natural hitters baseball has ever known, never won a league batting championship—but it was only because the great Ty Cobb was setting the pace when Jackson was at his best.

For three years Jackson batted second only to Cobb—and his all-time season high of .408 would have won the league championship 31 times out of the last 34 years.

Jackson finished second to Cobb in 1911, with .408 against .402; second again in 1912 with .395 against .410; and second for a third time in 1913 when Cobb batted .390. He would have won three league batting championships in a row but for Cobb.

Jackson is remembered as one of the disgraced members of the White Sox in the 1919 series when players are said to have sold out to gamblers—yet, strange as it seems, Jackson equaled a world's record for World Series batting during that series.

Natural ice is found near Coudersport, Pa., throughout the summer at the Coudersport Ice Mine, located on Ice Mountain. The ice forms in the early spring and remains there during the summer, yet it melts upon the approach of cold weather. Icicles one to three feet in diameter and 15 to 25 feet long are not uncommon in the mine.

Disgraceful Laxity.

Stone walls do not a prison make, nor iron bars a cage—if those for whom they were so intended can obtain guns with which to shoot their way to freedom. The officials of the Richmond jail have much to answer for in allowing two convicted murderers so easy an access to the great outdoors.

Entrusted with the detention of two dangerous men, guards allowed them to leave their locked cells for a conference with an attorney. In some manner that must be explained, the men had obtained firearms Using these, with the cruelty which has marked their whole career, they shot their way out of the jail through three doors—which apparently were not locked.

The communities affected by the depredations and murders of the so-called "tri-State" gang will not be content with any lackadaisical explanation of this affair. Justly, they will want to know how the escape was possible, and equally justly, they may demand the removal of those whose laxity allowed the two convicted murderers again to become a scourge to the community.

Particularly good police work brought about the cleaning up of a vicious crowd of hoodlums whose incompetence in the world of crime was accompanied by far too much bloodshed. This good police work brought about the death of certain associates of those whom a jury had convicted of murder. Particularly bad work, on the part of the authorities of the Richmond jail, let the prisoners loose again, and before they are recaptured some useful citizen may pay for this laxity with his life!

It stands to reason that Robert Mais and Walter Laganza will be caught sooner or later. When they are, let us hope that they will be kept in some place where they can not repeat Saturday's escapade, some place where the evident laxity of the Richmond jail will not be tolerated.

Merely A Tangent.

Construction of subsistence homesteads for unemployed war veterans is under discussion by officials of the FERA and the Veterans' Administration. Politicians who are responsible for emasculation of the economy act of 1933, and who have tried to secure immediate cash payment of the so-called veterans' bonus, not due until 1945, have apparently devised a new vote-catching expedient for which they are seeking the Administration's indorsement.

Veterans who were actually disabled by their war service—and many who were not so disabled—are already receiving substantial benefits from the Government. Compared with millions of citizens subsisting on temporary doles, their needs are not urgent. That is one point.

The second point is that proposals to settle partially disabled veterans on subsistence farms seem doomed to failure in advance. Former soldiers who are really disabled are not likely to make a success at farming, even on a restricted scale. And those who are not in fact disabled have no valid claim to special treatment from the Government over and above that which is already generously accorded.

Attempts to deal with unemployment in special groups can only obscure the larger problems of relief which are pressing for solution. It is a pity that the Federal agencies should be diverted by such tangents to their major tasks.

Is It Architecture?

There are many intelligent persons who have asked, with D. F. McGowan, whose letter appears on this page today, whether the new buildings along Pennsylvania avenue will be considered either art or architecture fifty years hence. Others, less kindly, ask: Are they art, or architecture, now?

This is an extremely controversial subject which only the brave or the brash will dare answer with finality. In the first place, what is architecture? If we accept a modern definition, architecture is not just the art of designing a building, but is that art combined with the science of sociology. Any one with talent or engineering skill can lay the plans for a building based upon existing models. The architect, however, according to modern theory, must take into account the people the building is to serve, what it is to be used for, its relation to the community, its accessibility, what effect it will have upon traffic and a hundred and one other important items. Then he builds his structure from the inside, letting its shape and design depend upon its use. For, to this school, a building is but a tool; utility is the keynote; and design that does not grow out of its use is extraneous and silly.

On these premises the Government buildings in Washington are not good architecture. They are Roman in origin, and thus foreign to the form of government they were built to serve. They are designed from the outside, and, as thousands of Government workers complain, they may be classically beautiful to look at, but have little relationship in their design to their obvious function.

Furthermore, they are so placed as to involve down town Washington in a terrible snarl of traffic, and their adjacency to the Potomac does not add to the summertime comfort of working in them. Little if any of the newer knowledge of engineering, or architecture, says the functional theorist, was used in their construction. They were built on a plan which may have looked well on paper to the uninitiated, but which has turned out instead to be a monument of erroneous planning.

Will it take us 50 years to prove or disprove the assertions of the functional school, to whom the Washington of today is an architectural folly?

Look Before Leaping.

Thousands of congratulatory messages have descended upon Senator Gerald P. Nye, chairman of the investigating committee which last week completed the first phase of its inquiry into the munitions industry in the United States. It is not surprising that this should be the case. The inquiry revealed much information of a sensational character and gave to the average citizen a new conception of the uncontrolled forces which combat in effect, if not by intent, the efforts to secure world peace. To see glaring publicity given to what has been essentially a secret traffic, evoked a responsive chord among all who desire a better world order.

So none will gainsay Senator Nye's right to congratulations. He and his committee have done excellent work. Nevertheless, it is important to draw that committee's attention to the fact that its real problems lie ahead. If, on the strength of the flood of praise it is receiving, the committee is impelled to careless action, the good initial results of the investigation may be imperiled. So it is to be hoped that Senator Nye will be able to withstand the hero worship of an emotional people and will not be prompted by it to rush forth with proposals for legislation that will meet the approbation of the unthinking—and accomplish nothing constructive.

In the first place, action by the United States alone in this matter can not be fully effective. While it is imperative for this country to puts its own house in order in such matters as securing continuous governmental information on the traffic by its own citizens, the efforts of the committee will be largely nullified if the other large arms-making nations do not also act. A comparable parliamentary investigation by Great Britain seems probable. Arms inquiries are already under way in several South American countries. But this is not enough.

As we have pointed out before, the League of Nations already possesses the machinery for a cooperative inquiry. Over a period of years it has been collecting material on the private munitions traffic of the world. It is in a position to supplement, from an international viewpoint, our own local revelations. And while the league has no power to compel its members to do what this country is doing voluntarily, it is readily possible for it to demonstrate which countries are most interested in blocking further information on the traffic in arms.

The problem before Senator Nye's committee, in other words, is how to transform the good start it has made on this subject into effective international action. Our close relations with the league, and our State Department's highly developed system of cooperation with Geneva, make the solution of the problem possible, provided the league does not decide to evade its responsibilities in this field. Should that be the case—and it must be ascertained—there will not be much of any permanent value that our Congress can accomplish single-handed.

Acquiring College Credits.

Carl W. Ziegler, professor of education at Lafayette College, reports that the catalogues of representative institutions of higher learning "reveal an interesting confusion as to just what is an extra-curriculum activity." Some universities and colleges allow credit for activities which are elsewhere regarded as outside the regular curriculum and therefore contribute nothing toward the accumulation of credits.

This diversity of practice reflects in part the perpetual conflict between the right and left wing elements within our institutions of learning. On the one hand are educators who oppose changes in stereotyped curricula that are a product of a past age and of vanished intellectual ideals. At the other extreme is the "advanced" group that would ignore distinctions between studies having an acknowledged cultural or disciplinary value and those courses designed to instruct students in the art of making a living.

In practice the line of distinction between vocational and non-vocational courses is often difficult to draw, partly because the method, rather than the subject matter of instruction in many cases determines the classification. As a result of this difficulty and because of the differing views of those in authority, institutions of learning show a wide diversity of standards and great differences in the emphasis placed upon the so-called "practical" courses counting toward a degree.

Prof. Ziegler, however, is chiefly concerned with present-day efforts to train young men and women for citizenship by increasing the variety of their avocational pursuits. To encourage the student to engage in nonacademic pursuits, a large number of institutions of learning have elevated all sorts of noncurricular activities to the rank of regular "studies" for which credit is given. For instance, summer employment under supervision, work in student organizations, membership in the college band, etc., are avocations which may bring the student a few steps nearer his degree. In some cases, credits are granted for courses in the teaching of team sports and choir singing is likewise rewarded with credits.

The list is long, amazing and depressing because it betrays a lack of comprehension of the purpose of academic education and the reason for the distinction between activities which train the mind and those which test powers of application or provide an outlet for stored energy. There is no question about the desirability of extra-curricular activities that are congenial and that bring students into contact with their fellows. But if the spontaneity which gives value and meaning to these activities is destroyed by an offer of credits, if the distinction between work and play, mental discipline and active performance, is hoplessly confused in college catalogues, the student is likely to emerge, poorly trained and with distorted views of what constitutes useful preparation for adult life.

Cat And Mouse, Inc.

Secretary Wallace may not be skilled in military science, but he has taken advantage of an ancient maneuver of war to oppose certain critics of the New Deal. To those who are apprehensive over the Administration's excursion into commercial enterprise he replies, in his latest magazine article, that the country has also suffered from attempts of business to control the Government. Thus, in the hands of the Secretary, defense becomes a bold attack.

The tactics thus employed are unquestionably adroit. Mr. Wallace has, so to speak, carried the war into the enemy's camp. It is a matter of fact, he says, that "certain businesses have always been up to their necks in government." And it is hardly necessary for him to point out that such conditions have given rise to grave abuses. But the mere presentation of countercharges does not dispose of the issue now at hand—what are the long-range implications of the subtle extension of bureaucratic enterprises with the support of the Treasury behind them?

It is regrettable that after making such a positive attack upon his critics, Mr. Wallace should take refuge in a trench of generalities. He writes:

> If we are not to go in for Communism or Fascism, it is most essential that government learn to look on itself as a partner with business, labor, agriculture and consumers.

These phrases seem calculated to soothe rather than enlighten the intelligence. In point of fact, there can be no such thing as a partnership of government and business, but only a division of the sphere of economic activity between them. Some clear thinkers would say that the part played by government should be severely restricted; others can argue effectively that it should be made all-embracing. But the suggestion of partnership between the two will take a lot of clarifying if it is to be made comprehensible.

The most disappointing thing about Secretary Wallace's discussion of Government in business is the impression it gives that this member of the Cabinet does not have a clear idea of what the partnership involves. It would be helpful for him to recall the ancient fable about the partnership concluded between Mr. Cat and Mr. Mouse. That was propounded by the farmer and from his viewpoint it proved an excellent arrangement.

And the beauty of this fable is that its moral holds true whether you take the cat to represent government ownership or predatory interests, and vice versa for the mouse.

Bowing To The Spoilsmen.

To citizens who are interested in efficient government in the District of Columbia the Commissioners' new policy of distributing jobs as political spoils is simply shocking. The local government is already under a handicap because of the flimsy basis upon which Civil Service regulations are applied to its personnel. Removal of department heads and their deputies from the group which is governed by competitive examinations is a blow to the morale of the entire municipal service.

The existing form of government in the National Capital proves reasonably satisfactory when it is conducted on a basis of efficiency and nonpartisanship. But if key positions are to be used as spoils to reward politicians for party service in distant States, it might easily degenerate into a corrupt machine. For selection of a director of highways, a municipal architect, a supervisor of playgrounds, etc., on the basis of political influence will mean a strong tendency toward substitution of "pull" for merit through the municipal service.

Washington is almost devoid of municipal politics. It is inexcusable to impose upon local taxpayers a spoils system for the benefit of State and Federal officials. Probably the Commissioners would never have taken this step, without pressure from the arch dispenser of patronage—Postmaster General Farley. But that does not relieve them of responsibility. It is a pity that they have compromised a fundamental principle of government at a time when they are trying by various other means to obtain the confidence and cooperation of local citizens.

"Life is a dream," says Sir James Jeans. We hope this statement will go a long way toward correcting the general impression that it's a nightmare.

It would seem that Upton Sinclair was nominated Governor of California on a con-Fusion ticket.

Giving a woman driver the right of way isn't prompted by politeness; it's prompted by the first law of nature.

A Parade of the Past From the Files of The Post.

TWENTY YEARS AGO TODAY.

THE BATTLE OF THE AISNE took its place in history as the greatest struggle of all time, according to a compilation made by the War Department. In length of time it was surpassed only by the battle of Mukden in the Russo-Japanese War, which lasted 20 days, but in point of numbers engaged and extent of battle front, it far overshadowed that conflict.

MAX LINDER, the "movie idol with the $70,000 face," was slain in the battle of the Aisne.

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

Is It Architecture?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read with interest your editorial "In Praise of Brown Paint," which appeared in The Post of September 27, in which you state, at least inferentially, that the State Department building, with its French motif, its curleyques and doodads, is not architecture, is not art—all against the following definition in the letter to the editor, "The Poets' Place," appearing on your editorial page of the same date:

> Art is the interpretation of the beauties of God's nature to the best in man's nature, and it takes God, the artist, and the public to make a triangle. . . .

The State Department Building came out of the jigsaw era—a true jigsaw puzzle. Certainly the architect thought it was the last word—his magnum opus. Whether the plans called for cast-iron deer on the front lawn is perhaps not known.

All of which brings us to a consideration of the architecture of the new buildings which have arisen along Pennsylvania avenue. Are they architecture? Will some critic 50 years hence, ired perchance by his inability to get within a mile of them in an automobile, denounce them as neither art nor architecture, I wonder?

After all, are not art and architecture pretty much a matter of taste, as the old lady said when she kissed the cow? Who knows what noble and esthetic thoughts there were within the bosom of the gentleman who used brown paint to refurbish the statue of the Reverend Beecher? D. F. McGOWAN.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Just a word of congratulation upon your editorial in The Post of September 25, on "Laughter." Your phrase, "Insullian secrecy" will become a classic. Perhaps he who laughs last laughs best.

As Others See It

Instructive Munitions Hearings.

The special committee of the Senate investigating the munitions industry has adjourned its public hearings until December. Despite the fact that the taking of testimony lasted for less than three weeks, a period which gave the committee opportunity to do little more than scratch the surface, this inquiry takes its place in the forefront of Congressional public services since the war. For the first time, the people who foot the bills have had a good look at the practices and methods of the armament makers.

We are convinced that the great bulk of public opinion stands squarely behind this investigation. If what the enabling resolution calls "the commercial motive" is in truth one of the "inevitable factors" in the stimulation and sustention of wars, then those who must do the suffering and dying in the event of war have every right to full knowledge of the fact.

As appropriations go, that of $15,000 for the expenses of the committee conducting this investigation was unusually small. If Senator Nye and his co-workers find themselves in need of more money before they are prepared to present their recommendations to Congress, nothing should stand in the way of an additional grant. There are already reports of a plan to strangle the committee by withholding a further appropriation if one is asked for. Should the occasion arise, the Senate ought to have little difficulty in handling it.

A Reader's Opinion.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been here in the Veterans' Administration Home since May and have an abundance of time for reading. My list includes a number of leading newspapers. I pass The Post to many and it is very gratifying that the Virginia veterans—some very intellectual men—pronounce it by all odds the best paper. It is simply amazing how much good reading you furnish like Phelphs, Hall and by far the best society items. The editorials are strong, fair and have a manly, independent attitude.

Your reports of Maryland politics and the primaries were splendid. In fact, several Maryland people tell me they look to The Post for Maryland news.

The weakest items are the letters from Bargeron, "Barging Through Europe." Any of your reporters could sit down in Washington and give more information out of some of the American dailies and not half try.

I feel sure that the Washington public is appreciative of your paper and I am glad to note the great increase in advertising. You have created a great journal in a short time. J. H. SHEPHERD.

Again the Single Tax.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Henry Ware Allen, of Wichita, Kans., renews his plea for the single tax, and states that the Nation "should appropriate gradually the Government's legitimate ground rent, which is demonstrably the rightful property of no individual." He is correct in this, but does not seem to realize that the rulers of the present social order would never consent to such a principle, just and equitable as it is.

The single tax is naturally a part of the Socialist idea to eliminate exploitation of the many by the few. Capitalism will never indorse any plan to restrict or destroy itself. The single tax would break two or three ribs of the capitalist system, but would not eliminate the major evil which is now more important than the taxation of land values. This evil is the continued private ownership of the money system by the banking oligarchy and the autocratic control of the machinery of production by the few, to the detriment of the many. The single tax will never be adopted by capitalism. Only Socialists would do it. A. S. E. BELL.
Washington, Sept. 28.

High Pressure.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Any normal person will become greatly incensed at any form of physical torture, and yet many individuals employ a form of torture that is even worse, namely, mental.

For example, whenever high-pressure salesmanship is employed it is apt to cause the client to purchase merchandise he can not afford. The consequence is that the client's equilibrium is upset, and he is mentally thrown off balance; the firm represented is thrown off balance because they can not collect, and the salesman is thrown off balance because he has betrayed the confidence that was placed in his judgment.

When all concerned are thrown into a perturbed condition it is utterly impossible to use good judgment and apply common sense to any given proposition.

Yet we wonder why it is so difficult to stabilize business.

Evils of Aristocracy.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A few days ago I read with curiosity and disgust a fulsome article in The Post in behalf of a Mr. Lanham and his work with the trees of the District. It was well written, but I don't think the writer looked into the facts before he took his pen in hand. If he will come down here I will show him some of the facts that are visible from my windows, trees that once were beautiful but have been so mutilated by our District tree butcher that they are now pitiful, rotting stumps. They will never be beautiful trees again, but in a few years, without having lived half their allotted span, they will be so decayed that they will be replaced by young trees that will furnish new material to keep the process going.

There is no money in merely keeping the bugs off of trees and allowing them to fulfill their manifest destiny, but there is money in selling young trees to the taxpayers and there is money in building up a bureau with a lot of useless employes to parade before the Appropriations Committee.

Your article states that Mr. Lanham has held this job all his life and that his father held it before him. A splendid example of the evils of landed aristocracy on the public pay roll.

HOWARD B. SMITH.

Tammany Technique.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Has Mr. Roosevelt, America's Santa Claus, taken a leaf from Tammany Hall? His close friend and adviser, Jim Farley, is a Tammany man.

Tammany's policy is to feed and clothe the poor man for a consideration—the poor man's vote. Tammany fills the poor man's coal scuttle and potato bin, gets him a job, "springs" him out of police court, and gives his children picnics and May Day outings. But Tammany does all this in order to keep in power and wax rich. It cares nothing for good government.

If Mr. Roosevelt is Tammany Hall on a huge scale, he may remain in office the rest of his life unless some great patriot statesman shows the country its peril and restores liberty and good government.

Who Wants an Auto You Wind Up?

The Japanese, who are upsetting some of the European colonial empires with their trade expansion, will probably not throw American automobile manufacturers into hysterics by putting on the market a clock-work car.

The details are as yet lacking, but the report is that with one winding the new vehicle will go 40 miles, and its efficiency is expected to be improved later on. If this is the case, a couple of pertinent observations could be made by any youngster who has studied high school physics. He would suggest, first, that the clock-work car must be a pretty minute model, incapable of carrying more than one passenger. And he would hazard, secondly, that having wound up a spring capable of such power, the driver would surely have earned his 40-mile ride.

Gasoline is too cheap and motor vehicles too reasonable in proportion to average income in this country to permit Americans to await such a contraption with bated breath. And the average European would just as soon pedal his bicycle, and thereby spread the labor over the whole 40 miles instead of concentrating it and wasting time at the two ends of the trip.

Nor does any of this consider what would happen to automobile and driver if this allegedly mammoth spring should break from too tight a winding.

The Post Impressionist

"Aged One Hundred."

Postoffice, Monday.

THE other day, dispatches from Mobile announced that colored George Owens was well and happy at the age of 103. They added that, after 40 years' blindness, he was recovering his sight. This came sufficiently close upon the last news concerning Turk Zora Agha, who shuffled off his mortal coil at an alleged 156, thereby just escaping a seventh marriage. And the two events, plus one more, provide an unneglected opportunity for many a "popular science" writer to speculate pleasantly upon the theory that man's life term has very recently been lengthening.

• • • •

The third case was "Aunt Mary" Knapp's. That collector of the historic and curious, Col. Henry W. Shoemaker, sends us word:

"Recently this 'Grand Old Lady' died at her home in Montgomery Square, Pa. She would have been 108 years old had she lived two months longer. She never married, being true, it is said, to the memory of a gallant dragoon who went to Mexico in '46—never to return. She was the oldest living member of the D. A. R. and granddaughter of Gen. Isaac Worrell, a hero of the Revolution, who himself lived to 112. The home in which this aged lady died was an old Colonial house that Washington used as his headquarters following the Battle of Germantown."

• • • •

But these instances are far from isolated. Centenarians have never been lacking, and the general life span doesn't either lengthen or diminish noticeably in a few years of the race's history. For our own part, we believe that these recent centenarians' fame lies simply in the fact that it is passing, and that the world remembers those of today merely because it forgets yesterday's.

The old Scots' Magazine, of Edinburgh, used to collect them. Our correspondent finds, in the year 1756, records of five, embalmed in as many obituary notices:

"February 9, at London, aged 104, John Bryan. In King William's reign he served as sergeant in all of the Irish wars. He had never been sick in his life until four days before his death.

"February 26, at Dublin, in the 110th year of his age, Mr. Netherton. He was a true Inniskilliner, and served under King William in the wars in Ireland. He has left a widow, his seventh wife.

"October 16, at Portobello, in Wexford County, Ireland, aged 107, Thomas Palliser, Esq. He served as an officer in all the wars under King William and retained his senses to the last.

"At Mortlake, Surrey, in the 104th year of her age, Mary Bayly. Till within half a year of her death, she could read and thread a needle without spectacles.

"Dec. 17. At Inn's Quay Infirmary, Dublin, aged 109, Judith Distaff. Her death was occasioned by a brewer's dray running over her a few days before, by which her thigh was broke."—Wherein we have probably discovered the origin of a certain song once popular at Billy Sunday's revivals.

Says our correspondent: "The three great Indian chiefs of the Revolutionary period, Cornplanter, Red Jacket and Black Snake, all lived well past the century mark. Cornplanter's last surviving granddaughter, Betsy O'Bail, told me that the famous warrior was 108 when he died. His mother was an Indian, but Miss O'Bail said that his father was a Dutch trader called Hendrick Abeel, of Huguenot origin, whose name had been corrupted until tradition gave him an Irish parent."

Anyhow, Cornplanter—like the Scots' Magazine's Thomas Palliser—"retained his senses to the last." For our informant tells us, this chief "about two years before his death revisited his former haunts and, when leaving, took a 'shilling,' carved it into a ring and gave it to his host, the late Dr. W. K. Gernerd, for remembrance." The colonel has seen the ring.

• • • •

There are Washingtonians and Virginians whose parents saw and talked with the Negro "mammy" of the Father of his Country; she died in 1845, in her one hundred and thirty-first year. Or turn, if you will, to the newspaper files of 1886, and there, under date of December 24, you can read:

"Mrs. Susan N. Warren, perhaps the oldest person in the United States, if not in the world, died at Tassakawa, Indian Territory, on the 5th instant. She was born a slave in St. Augustine, Fla., in 1750. She leaves a daughter, aged 97."

• • • •

Well, some day, when we have acquired the requisite leisure, the requisite mellowing—and the requisite old age—we may compose a columnar essay on that old-age foible, that common tendency of mankind, which compels the average individual to regard age as something virtuous in itself and for itself. We shall not run contrary to the Biblical injunctions regarding respect for the aged, because those injunctions must merely enjoin, first, respect from the young for that wisdom which experience can scarcely have failed to give their elders—and, second, deference to the weaknesses of the very aged and kindness toward them. But we may venture to inquire why most men should attribute some occult greatness to such folk as merely grow in years without perceptible increase in goodness or wisdom.

To be sure, the majority of the very old are very wise and very good—but simply the majority; not all. History has a few old men—yes, and some old women, too—whose premature passing would not have left the world much sadder.

Although "Many Years" is a devout wish, it implies that the gift has already been earned by a worth-while record.

• • • •

Anyhow, that's what we think now.

Of course, if we are doing much thinking on the subject a hundred years hence, we may think somewhat differently.

Along the Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

One Orphan of the Storm.

AT THE OUTBREAK of the revolution two men set out from the quaint little State of Mississippi for the Nation's Capital. Both of them, Mr. Bilbo and Mr. Sykes, had as high and lofty purposes as could possibly have been entertained by Mr. B. Franklin as he walked down a street of Philadelphia that memorable day.

BARGERON.

It was Mr. Sykes' ambition to give the people the most efficient radio commission any people ever had, while Mr. Bilbo, on the other hand, aspired to be the world's greatest paper clipper. At different times after their arrival here they stated their various aspirations.

Mr. Sykes in a remarkable interview which he gave to the Associated Press and which that organization copyrighted said it was his plan to set up a radio commission with a view to efficiency.

* * * *

As I recall the interview, he did not say positively that he would do this, because he was only one of five members on the commission, but he expressed great hope that the other members would agree with him in his idea that the new radio set-up should be with a view to efficiency.

About the same time, Mr. Bilbo was letting it be known on what high plane he hoped to put the paper-clipping business. It seemed to be his impression that there had been great misunderstanding about paper clippers. He lifted the standard at the outset by getting $6,000 a year for his paper-clipping work. This, in itself, caused the people to look upon paper clippers in an entirely different light. The question arose, in fact, as to whether there should not be a definite place for paper clippers at Washington dinner tables, a dinner table rank which our Cabinet members and members of the Diplomatic Corps hold.

Having thus focused the attention of the country on paper clippers, Mr. Bilbo sought to lift them further by insisting that they, or at least he, be called researchers. Although he did not say so in so many words, it was obvious that Mr. Bilbo hoped to make paper clippers as important to men as their secretaries.

Thus the two Mississippi boys who came to the city to make good—holding, as regards the revolution, that it is an ill wind that blows nobody any good—thus it was, I say, that they progressed in their respective orbits.

* * * *

Then a strange thing happened. It is difficult to explain even at this late date. But it seems that both the paper-clipping aspirations of Mr. Bilbo and those of Mr. Sykes to give the people a Radio Commission with a view to efficiency came to be involved in the Mississippi Senatorial race.

Mr. Bilbo must have considered it essential to his paper-clipping uplift to be Senator from Mississippi and Mr. Sykes must have thought it part of his program to prevent Mr. Bilbo from becoming Senator and to help Senator Stephens retain that position instead.

* * * *

At any rate Mr. Bilbo entered the race, and down to Mississippi went Mr. Sykes to support Senator Stephens. Mr. Bilbo won.

It so happens that Mr. Sykes has not yet been confirmed as radio commissioner, that his confirmation comes up at the next session. Mr. Bilbo, the former paper clipper, will be there in the Senate to wage a fight on Mr. Sykes.

Ordinarily Mr. Bilbo's objections under the circumstances would be sufficient. After all, Mr. Sykes guessed wrong. Former rules and precedents are not holding good now, however, and it may be that Mr. Bilbo's fight will be unavailing.

It would seem, though, that the gift to the people of a radio commission with a view to efficiency is in jeopardy and that we should all be apprehensive of the outcome.

California Upheld On Recovery Laws

Appeals Court Refuses to Free Code Defendant.

Los Angeles, Sept. 30 (AP).—The California District Court of Appeals here has upheld the legality of the California recovery act, which derives from the National industrial recovery act.

The opinion, the first in an appellate court on the subject, denies the application for habeas corpus release of R. G. Lasswell, of Long Beach, charged with violating the code prescribed for dyers and cleaners. None of Lasswell's constitutional rights has been infringed, the opinion held.

Justice Stephens concluded in his opinion that "it may be said that government in business is more of an economic question than a legal one."

Cardinal Mori Dies; Was Vatican Judge

Vatican City, Sept. 30 (AP).—Cardinal Giuseppe Mori, judge of the supreme tribunal of the apostolic seal, died suddenly last night of heart disease at Loro Piceno, near Macerata. He was 84.

The aged cardinal was suffering from a complication of ailments and went to Loro to try to recover his health. Pope Pius, informed of his death this morning, celebrated mass for him.

Grave Crises Confront Colombian President

Tenant Farmers Clamor for Break-up of Enormous Landholds; Constitutional Convention May Be Called by Lopez.

By Lothrop Stoddard
(Special Correspondent of The Post).

THE whole world is passing through trying times. Every nation has its troubles. Each nation seeks to remedy them in one way or another. And some of these current situations are curiously reminiscent of our own. This is notably true of our South American neighbor, the United States of Colombia. There a new executive recently has taken office pledged to a political program involving momentous economic and social changes.

Elected by an overwhelming popular vote and apparently enjoying extraordinary public confidence, President Alfonso Lopez represents the ideal of a "liberal republic"—a veritable new order which undertakes to solve Colombia's pressing domestic problems. Yet though the new administration is less than two months old Colombia is seething with unrest, including such unpleasant happenings as ugly strikes, farmers' revolts and agitation for radical constitutional changes. The Colombian "new deal" certainly has its difficulties.

Though Colombia is the northernmost country of South America and hence comparatively near us, we are less familiar with it than with some other Latin American countries geographically much more remote. Colombian rancor at the secession of its former province of Panama in 1903, benevolently favored by President Theodore Roosevelt, kept Colombian-American relations chronically strained for many years. Only during the post-war decade did commercial and financial ties between the two countries become close.

Country Is Large, Population Small.

OCCUPYING the northwest corner of the South American continent, Colombia is a large country with an area of nearly 500,000 square miles—somewhat larger than all our northeastern block of States between the Mississippi River and the Atlantic Ocean as far southward as the Mason and Dixon line. Considering its size, Colombia's population is relatively small, being somewhat under 8,000,000.

Furthermore, the bulk of this population is massed in the western half of the country, where a series of high mountain ranges and lofty plateaus give an area lying close to the equator the climate of the Temperate Zone. This cool climate likewise accounts for the fact that the upland regions of Colombia are settled mainly by a white population. The capital, Bogota, is at an elevation of 8,600 feet above sea level. Bogota has been a center of culture ever since early colonial days, and boasts the purest Spanish spoken in all Latin America.

Until recently, Bogota was virtually a hermit city, reached from the outer world only by mule or horseback over dizzy mountain trails. The mountainous nature of the country rendered not only railways but even highroads prohibitively costly. One important waterway, the Magdalena River, did penetrate the heart of Colombia, but rapids in its upper reaches required transshipment of freight and passengers at several points. All this held back economic development. Today, the airplane has largely solved the problem of quick passenger traffic and the transport of valuable merchandise of relatively small bulk.

The postwar decade brought Colombia unprecedented prosperity. Its traditional export staple had been coffee. The development of extensive oil fields tapped a new source of wealth and other lines of activity were opened up. Foreign capital, largely American, poured in. The government undertook an ambitious program of public works, chiefly in the field of communications. Colombia experienced its first boom.

All this was fine, but it cost a lot of money. And most of the money came through borrowings abroad. By the spring of 1930, these foreign debts stood at over $200,000,000, a very large sum for a country in Colombia's early stage of economic development. Had world prosperity continued unabated, these debts might have been serviced. But along came the world depression. Exports shrank, debt charges mounted, Colombia defaulted on its foreign bonds. The deadly downward spiral so sadly familiar in our own economic life occurred in Colombia as well.

International Crisis Aggravated Troubles.

TO make matters worse, domestic difficulties were aggravated by a diplomatic crisis threatening foreign war. This was the Leticia boundary dispute with Peru. Determined to maintain its rights, the government made extensive purchases of military equipment abroad. This aggravated the financial situation to such an extent that the administration preceding that of President Lopez was forced to adopt inflationary measures. Disastrous effects upon Colombia's economic life naturally followed. The cost of living rose sharply; wages and salaries lagged; all classes became discontented. It was under these circumstances that Alfonso Lopez campaigned on his Liberal Republic platform and received an emphatic popular approval.

The powers of the central government in Columbia are wide. This was not always the case. Formerly Colombia was a loose federation. In 1885 a bloody civil war was fought, largely over the issue of states rights. The centralizing party won, and the constitution of 1886 took away most of the states' former prerogatives. The constitution also stressed property rights, including those of the big landowners. This aspect has of late years been vigorously challenged by a radical agitation, especially in the rural regions.

Though certain districts of Colombia support a population of small landowners, much of the countryside is held by great landlords who rent out their estates to a tenant peasantry. These tenants have been very hard hit by the agricultural depression and are threatened with evictions from farms which they have occupied for many years. Agitators have made the most of this opportunity and have so inflamed the peasants that in some districts they have seized the land, defied the landlords, and demanded that the government confirm their action by giving them title thereto.

This, President Lopez has resolutely refused to do. In fact, peasant revolts have been quelled by troops at the cost of considerable bloodshed. The government has likewise taken a firm stand against violence in the numerous strikes of urban workers. However, the new administration states its belief that both rural and urban unrest has a certain justifiable basis and is seeking to enact measures which will remedy genuine hardships and abuses. For example, it has publicly stated that great landholds owned by absentee landlords are against the public interest and should be broken up, albeit measures of expropriation should provide for reasonable indemnity to the original proprietors.

Constitutional Question Balks Action on Lands.

SUCH reform measures, however, run up against the question of constitutionality. As already remarked, the Constitution of 1886 embodied safeguards for property rights of the most explicit character. Although the Lopez administration is pledged to govern in strictly legal fashion, several of its spokesmen have publicly expressed doubts that the Liberal Republic program can be fulfilled without important changes in the Contsitution itself. At present, the whole matter is up for discussion. The President has expressed himself as in favor of trying to discover by actual experience whether needed reforms can be effected under the existing Constitution, but he has indicated that he may call a constitutional convention.

President Lopez and his administration thus seem to be trying to steer a middle course between those conservative and radical forces whose clash has plunged Colombia into turmoil and has aggravated an already difficult economic situation. Whether the President will maintain this middle-of-the-road policy or will be pushed further to the left by the force of events, only time can tell.

Few Persons Impressed by Things They Can't See

By Robert Quillen

The timid wild beast recognizes a scent borne down the wind and is warned of an enemy's approach.

The simplest of men, seeing smoke, assumes the existence of fire.

And the keen mind of the scientist discovers truth by the same process.

No scientist ever has seen an atom. The most powerful microscope yet manufactured can not reveal one. Yet scientists know the atom exists and have divided it and studied the action of its parts.

Reason interprets results and efforts, and the cold logic of mathematics proves the existence of things unseen.

And yet the ordinary person, though convinced by reason, remains unimpressed by the thing he can not see.

If he gives thought to the matter, he is convinced by observation and reason that there is order in the universe. Something more than accident, or chance holds the stars forever to their courses and preserves the eternal germ of life in a grain of wheat.

If there is order, there is a power that maintains it.

Suppose the ordinary person could see the power that keeps the universe in order. Would he live as he now does?

Not for one moment. If he is awed by the power and glory of a President would be ignore the Power that gave them life?

Suppose that Power could be seen in the heavens as the sun is. Suppose man had visible evidence that his every act was observed by his Creator.

Would any man, high or low, rich or poor, fail in reverence or do less than his utmost to win the approval of a Being so omnipotent?

The things that now seem important would become trivial, and the greatest of men would walk humbly, and none would dare to do evil.

If that is true, men now do evil solely for want of visible evidence to support the testimony of their reason. They are not yet sufficiently developed to accept reason as a guide unless sight supports it. Out of sight, out of mind.

We have come but a little way since primitive man, seeing smoke, could not remember what caused it unless he also saw the fire.

No End of Books

Theodore Hall

Hobbies for Tired Heads

I SUPPOSE there are no fewer than 100,000 men and women in town who sit all day at a desk—whether in the White House, opening the President's mail, or in a department store, making out the monthly bills—and do nothing but type, scribble and read. We are engaged in the endless business of communication; more particularly, in communication by the written word and the written figure. And when we shut up shop and go home at night, the very last thing we feel like doing is to lay eyes on a word or an integer. Whereupon, what do we find to do by ourselves? We read a newspaper, magazine, or book, or we go to the movies. Without change or rest, the eyes have it.

THEO. HALL.

Well, the good books say we should take up iron working, or carpentry, or bricklaying, or woodchopping. Which is all very fine, but I've never yet, aside from a "lease-breaking party," found it convenient and proper to swing an ax in an apartment. Something else—neat, clean and Lilliputian—must be found.

* * * *

Fast to the rescue come the pocket-size "Hours of Leisure" booklets, issued by the Studio Publications, Inc., at 35 cents each. I'm not saying they'll fit all tastes—it's more than I can do to imagine some blue-bearded, subexecutive in the Forestry Service sitting up of an evening to sew a sofa cushion. But that might suit a young lady in the Adjutant General's Office to a T.

Here are the six volumes already published, each one amply illustrated and with full directions. Other titles, we're told, are to follow.

* * * *

No. 1—"The Model Theater," by Victor Hembrow. Cardboard, glue, and a box of water-color prints, and you can make a set for "The Beggars' Opera." Or you can indulge in the most modernistic of experiments.

No. 2—"Cut Paper Decoration," by Christopher St. John. With a sheaf of vari-colored papers, a pair of scissors, and a pot of paste, you can decorate everything from a matchbox to the front hall.

No. 3—"Fabric Printing," by W. B. Adeney. You cut the dies from linoleum, ink them, and print cloth in any shade and pattern you've a mind to.

No. 4—"The Doll's House," by J. A. Grant. With ordinary household materials, here is the utmost range for ingenuity. If you're a little embarrassed by your hoary age, let some child sit beside you while you tinker away.

No. 5—"Cushion Making," by Jeannetta Cochran. Needle and thread were once no play for a woman. Now you might find it fun from sheer novelty.

No. 6—"Radio and Gramaphone Cabinets," by P. A. Wells. You may think this takes a carpenter shop, but it doesn't. You can keep the few tools, the plywood and glue, under the coats in the hall closet when you haven't got them out on the card table.

These little books are worth their weight in gold as suggestions for avoiding our usual head-working, monotonous leisure. Kipling once said: "There's no answer to boredom." But here are six sound replies.

* * * *

If you do have a bit of floor space and more ambition, you graduate into the studio's "How To Do It" series—a considerably larger and more expensive set of handbooks which have already described etching, wood-engraving, water-color painting, line drawing, sculpture, and portrait painting. Most of these take a room of their own, and a somewhat complicated equipment.

The latest book in this thoroughly admirable series is Walter de Sager's "Making Pottery" ($3.50). In a pretty saddle-worn career of riding hobbies—everything from collecting beetles to designing type pages—the notion of shaping up a water jug never came to me. But now, after reading Mr. de Sager's workmanlike text and looking at the dozens of photographs showing every step in the process (with any number of handsome and historic examples as well), I itch to begin.

* * * *

You take, I find, a hunk of clay about as big as a large loaf of bread. (Kinds of clay and methods of caring for it are all discussed carefully.) You cut it in two by pulling a wire through it sideways. Then you slam one half down hard upon the other. By repeating the process, you gradually work the clay into a good texture. This is called "wedging."

Then you take a piece as big as your two fists, say, and sit down before the "potter's wheel." This is a vertical axle with a 12-inch disc at the top, about waist high when you're sitting, and with a 24-inch disc at the bottom which you kick around with your feet. In the center of the top disc, dry, you place your clay. Then you start the contraption revolving and you're all set to begin the shaping process—known as "throwing."

With wet hands—you must keep a bowl of water beside you—you begin to mold the spinning lump of clay. You work it up into a cone, you start to press a hole down in the center, you widen and deepen the hole, bringing the sides up higher and higher. Every touch you give the spinning shape molds it symetrically. And by and by you have your jug, or vase, or bowl, or main part of a teapot.

Each further step, drying, glazing, decorating, firing, Mr. de Sager makes just as plain. Doesn't it sound like something fun to do when you're fed up with words and figures?

The Once Over

The Naming of the Ship.

"Oh, what'll she name the ship?"
they asked,
"Oh, what'll she name the ship?"—
There was no one knew
And she gave no clew
And nobody had a tip.

"Oh, what'll she call the boat?"
they cried,
"Oh, what'll she call the boat?"
There was none could tell
For she kept it well
And there wasn't a soul to quote.

"Oh, what'll the queen's selection be?
Oh, what do you think she'll choose?"
Thus did England cry
Without one reply,
As it waited to hear the news.

"Oh, what'll she christen the liner grand,
And whose will the honor be?"
Asked the folks each day
But she wouldn't say,
So strict was her secrecy.

"Do you think she will name it Britannia?
Do you think she will? Do tell"
But no answer came
From the royal dame
As she guarded her secret well.

"There's a story she'll call it Victoria,"
The gossip ran house-to-house,
But the queen declined
To reveal her mind
And kept still as the stillest mouse.

"Oh, I hear she will honor a famous king
Or maybe a gen'ral grand,"
Said the whispers low,
But they didn't know,
For she never would tip her hand.

"She'll christen it for an admiral Renowned for his deeds at sea,"
Said a diplomat
In a high silk hat,
"Unless it is named for me!"

"The ship's to be named for the prince, I hear,
Or possibly for the king,"
Was a hushed report
From the royal court,
But the queen wouldn't say a thing.

"Her highness will honor a martyred knight
Or maybe a battle site,"
Said a certain lord
With a look quite bored,
But the queen kept her mouth shut tight.

Then came the day when they launched the ship,
A vessel which knew no peer;
In great suspense
The crowd immense
Awaited the name to hear.

"Oh, what'll she name the boat?"
they gasped,
"Oh what will the queen's choice be?"
Then the queen she spoke
As the bottle broke:
"I christen thee QUEEN MARY!"

Today's Big Query.

Dear Hi: Whatever became of the conductor who used to walk in the car and say, "Madam, this is the smoker?"
Very truly yours,
M. A. HULSART.

"No one in the Cunard line knew what Queen Mary would name the new liner until she spoke the name. It was a complete surprise to us."—Sir Ashley Sparks. Surprise? Why you could have knocked even King George over with a feather.

All Cunard-White Star liners' names have ended with "ia" or "ic" in the past, but Queen Mary probably decided it was better to change the custom than to change her name to either Mariac or Maria.

Venice to Decide Fight on Painting Of Marion Davies

Venice, Italy, Sept. 30 (AP).—The Venetian civil court will sit in judgment tomorrow on a demand by the Whitney Art Museum of New York for the right to withdraw its exhibit from the biennial art exposition in protest over the hanging of a painting of Marion Davies, motion-picture actress.

The museum objected to the fact that the painting, although not forming part of its exhibit, occupies a place in the entrance to the American pavilion. After strenuous efforts to obtain its removal the picture is the first visitors see when they go to inspect the American display.

Suit for the right to remove the entire Whitney exhibit as a protest was filed by attorneys acting for Mrs. Julianna Force, directress of the museum, last July, after exposition authorities had determined to allow the painting to stay.

Hints that the exhibit would be withdrawn brought an official statement that no pictures could be removed from the exposition until it was over. Mrs. Force forthwith ordered the legal action.

FREDERIC ADRIAN DELANO, chairman, National Capital Park and Planning Commission. Bears a strong resemblance to his sister, the President's mother. Born in Hongkong, of Massachusetts stock, he is Harvard educated and is fond of New England, where he passes frequent vacations. His duties here include the advisory council of the National Arboretum, the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, the Washington National Monument Society, and the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works. Is an ardent advocate of the plan to transfer supervision of U. S. Botanic Gardens from Congress to the Department of Agriculture. Was a colonel with the A. E. F. during the war, served as vice-governor of Federal Reserve Board, 1914-1918, and has had wide railroad engineering experience. Iron-gray hair, tall, stockily built, he shies from the press, avoids public contact and testifies occasionally on "The Hill" with a "Back Bay" accent.

Such a large proportion of those who have been pictured by Mr. Robles have asked for the originals that The Washington Post is saving all these drawings to honor the requests of any future members of "The National Gallery."

Rome Declares Paris Alliance Report Untrue

Government Spokesman Calls Pact Contrary to Fascist Aims.

Rome, Sept. 30 (AP).—A spokesman for the government today flatly denied reports of an Italo-French military, political and economic alliance under which France was to give Italy 2,000,000,000 lire ($172,950,000) in exchange for Italian treasury bonds, and renounce her naval competition in the Mediterranean.

"These reports, in addition to being untrue, are not even logical," said the spokesman. "They are contrary to Italian policy under the Fascist regime, which has been not to accept foreign loans on the grounds that interest payments would disturb the stability of the lira.

"Moreover, if there is a question of borrowing money, there is plenty to be had on the internal market, as shown by Italy's rapid increase in bank savings.

"Whatever rapprochement may be reached during the visit here of French Foreign Minister Louis Barthou, it will not be in the nature of an alliance."

The spokesman intimated that Barthou will not come to Rome probably until November, since preliminary negotiations are proceeding slowly.

This does not indicate negotiations are encountering obstacles, said the spokesman, but merely that there are so many details to be considered concerning relations between the two countries that an outline for discussion could not be reached before that time.

Russia Grants Ballot to Ten Million Kulaks

90,000,000 to Vote Nov. 10; Loyalty to Soviets Is Test for Vote.

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Moscow, Sept. 30.—Ninety million Russian voters, 10,000,000 more than there were three years ago, will participate in Soviet general elections to be held starting November 10 to elect delegates to the seventh All-Union Soviet Congress.

The 10,000,000 new voters are mostly children and youths, sons and daughters of Kulaks, who are doing useful work for the Soviet Union. The central executive committee issued regulations today giving them the right to vote.

The youngsters have been trained by Communist and labor organizations. The bars have been let down also for many Kulaks and their families, those who have demonstrated their loyalty to the Soviet Union.

Kulaks (farmers) in exile for anti-Soviet activity who have been working faithfully in their new homes are to be given back the ballot after five years' exile, or after three years if they are engaged in the gold or platinum industries.

Young kulaks who have become shock brigadiers in Russian industries under the second five-year plan are to be given the ballot regardless of the length of their exile.

All dependent relatives of exiled kulaks have been disfranchised under stringent Soviet constitutional restrictions, and today's order provided the vote will be restored to them automatically when the franchise bar is lifted against the head of the family.

Regulations provide that no election will be valid in which 50 per cent of the qualified electors fail to cast their votes.

The general elections are to be held between November 10 and January 10, with the Congress opening January 15. Nine hundred and eighty-six delegates are to be chosen for the All-Union Congress, which is the supreme authority under the Soviet constitution.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors

October.

The word October is a Latin word meaning eighth, for it was the eighth month, as the year began in March, in the old Roman style. In the Julian calendar, it became, of course, the tenth month, but it retained its old Latin name, and it kept that name triumphantly, although a great many attempts were made to change it. Inasmuch as Julius Caesar had got his name fastened on to one of the months and his successor Augustus had presented another, why should not others be equally successful?

Well, they tried. For a short time October was known as Germanicus, again as Antoninus, again as Herculeus, which last was a surname of Commodus. These names did not stick. The Roman Senate attempted to pay a compliment by giving it the name Faustinus after a woman; for Faustina was the wife of Antoninus. She had a rather shady reputation, although that may have been the result of slander; for her husband remained devoted to her. Still, it is just as well we keep to the name October.

Antoninus, called Pius, was Roman Emperor from the year 138 to 161. He was a good man and an able emperor, intelligent, broad-minded and civilized. He took good care of the distant provinces of the Empire, and he will always be remembered in Great Britain because he built the Wall of Antoninus from the Forth to the Clyde. Only one of his children survived, but she married the great Emperor Marcus Aurelius!

Among the Slav nations October is often called the Yellow Month, because of the dying leaves. The Anglo-Saxons called it Winterfylleth — from winter and full moon—because at the time of the October moon winter was supposed to start in. We call the October moon the Hunter's Moon; as the season of hunting (riding after the hounds) begins in October and it is a pleasant thing to have moonlight on the way home from the hunt. This is a shameless guess on my part.

October sounds like its nature; sonorous and robust. But although to Americans October means the most inspiring weather, it is anything but that in northern Europe.

Filipinos Tackling Constitution Find It's Not So Simple

Manila, Sept. 30 (AP).—Filipinos are finding writing of the constitution of the commonwealth government, designed to bridge the gap before complete independence, a longer and more difficult task than anticipated.

Two months after the convention of 202 delegates assembled July 30 not a single clause of the document has been written. It had been asserted the task probably would be completed in a month.

Senator Claro Recto, president of the convention, and Filemon Sotto, chairman of the central committee, predicted today the constitution would be completed in November. Others believe it may be December before the charter can be submitted to President Roosevelt.

The convention as a whole is scheduled tomorrow to take up the constitution's preamble, which fails to express island gratitude at granting of independence by the United States. This may mean further delay, as such an expression was favored originally by the preamble committee.

Stylists Capture Vivid Colors Of Autumn in Season's Frocks

One naturally associates with springtime the cheery but somewhat timid chirpings of birds, a bit reluctant to send forth their songs because of winter's uncertain departure; and summer is the time of lazy breezes, pastel flowers and green hills; but autumn is alive and dashing with its crisp, chill miniature gales that come leaf-churning down the streets, and its vivid colors. All of the trees and shrubs, which for the two preceding seasons have been unassuming in their soft greens, instead of bowing down to the north wind and his sharp companions and quietly dropping their leaves, come out in their splendor and flaunt vivid, tawny branches in a last defiant gesture.

Following Mother Nature in her autumn colors, the stylists also put aside the whites and soft blues and pinks and create frocks and hats of deep brown, startling reds and yellows and rich dark greens. As the twilight creeps up on the clock, a bit earlier each day, a cheery note is added by the people out on the streets attired in bright costumes.

Mrs. George H. Shields, wife of the deputy administrator of the NRA, was recently wearing a striped silk frock of shades of wine, brown and beige. Over this she wore a smart finger-tip length coat of soft yellow wool. Her felt sport hat and shoes were of mahogany brown.

Miss Betty Boynton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Boynton, and Miss Mary Elizabeth Damon, whose mother, Mrs. Mull, is the wife of Commander William P. Mull, are very busy indeed keeping up with the exciting debutante whirl. The other day, between engagements, they were out shopping on Connecticut avenue. Miss Boynton was wearing a wool frock of Hunter's green, trimmed with three large crystal buttons. Her hat with its perky quill was of the same shade of green as were her trim little ties and purse.

Miss Damon had on a lightweight wool suit in shades of dark blue. Eleanor blue and gray. The skirt was of checks of the Eleanor blue and gray and the coat was of the darker blue with a trimming of the plaid. Her small hat of light blue felt was trimmed with dark blue ribbon.

Miss Betty Balsley, daughter of Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. A. H. Balsley, who is a popular member of the Navy juniors, has a smart fall suit of sand-colored tweed with which she wears a knitted blouse of a trifle darker shade. Her sports hat is of brown felt which matches her suede pumps and bag.

At the recent golf matches at the Chevy Chase Country Club, which attracted Nation-wide attention, Mrs. R. A. Hefner, who is herself an ardent devotee of the sport, wore an especially attractive outfit. Her sweater was of white and over it she wore a cardigan of bright red. Her skirt, which would do as well for spectator as for active sports, is of gray tweed. To finish off the costume she wore angora socks to match the cardigan and white buck-skin oxfords.

Another golfer is Mrs. Frank Miller, who before her recent marriage to Lieut. Miller of the Navy, was Miss Dorothy Graham, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bryon U. Graham. One of her favorite frocks is of deep yellow wool. It is pleated at the neckline and tied with a woolen cord and is trimmed with large buttons of cork with centers of brass. To complete her costume she wears oxfords of dark brown suede.

Spanish Envoy Host at Party For Polo Stars

U. S. and Mexican Teams Honored at Embassy After Series.

The Spanish Embassy, on Sixteenth street, was the scene of an informal reception yesterday afternoon when the Ambassador of Spain and Senora de Calderon entertained in honor of the members of the Mexican and United States Army polo teams which participated in the thrilling international series.

The affair was a sherry party. In this country, cocktail parties are fast taking the place of teas, but in Spain, sherry is the wine of the country, hence the title for the enjoyable social functions.

In spite of the threatening skies and discouraging field yesterday afternoon, the two teams played their farewell game. The series had been decided at the close of the second game, when the "host" team, by brilliant and dogged playing, made certain the championship would remain in this country a while longer. Because of the game, the guests and even the hosts were late in arriving at the embassy.

The ambassador arrived first, having left the field before the finish in order to greet his guests. Shortly afterward Senora de Calderon arrived, attired in a smart black gown, the sleeves of which were trimmed with silver. Instead of receiving in the drawing room the Spanish envoy and his charming wife chose the more informal library with its brown paneling and cases and dark red leather furnishings. The buffet was in the patio, which was decorated with a profusion of ferns, palms and dark rose dahlias. Among the delightful refreshments served was the famous Spanish Andalusian ham, which is sliced quite thin and cut into small chips.

Almost upon the heels of the host and hostess there arrived the member of both teams, resplendent in their military uniforms. Senora de Echegaray, wife of the agricultural counselor of the embassy, assisted in receiving, wearing a gown of rich brown crepe and a matching tricorne and a silver fox scarf. Senorita Carmen Aspe, who also assisted, wore a satin gown of black with tiny dots, a black beret-hat and a scarf of blue fox. Senor Don Ramon Padilla y de Satrestegui, who was in New York for a visit, returned to assist at the reception.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

Well, here I am back again after a most hectic week-end. Oh, there is so much to do every day and night, I almost wish that they would make a 13 or 14 month calendar. But maybe that would not help after all.

Speaking of "being back" reminds me that two younger set members, who have been muchly missed, have returned to their usual haunts. Barbara Baker, who has been Bostoning is back and ready for school (for at least five days a week—the week-ends do not count) and Louise Waller has returned from Orange and is making plans for the winter.

The other night at the Mayflower Lounge I saw Peggy Nolley dancing and dining. Her straight up and down fez-ish hat was most becoming. Also enjoying the music was young Zachary Lansdowne in his blue and anchors, who apparently had traveled North and West from his "home on the Severn" for the evening and Natalie Keeney, frocked in black and shell pink, was enjoying the "floor," which seems to be a good one, because, surely 50,000,000 dancers can't be wrong.

Saturday evening "we" in inspite of falling weather drove out into Maryland to the Set's latest rendezous—the "Old Barn." There I saw something entirely new (at least to me) I have heard of playing tunes on combs, saws and even brooms (the latter was a contrivance called the depression fiddle which was played for me in Panama last year), but to make an ordinary table tumbler whistle a tune is another story. However, I not only heard and saw, but actually enjoyed said recital.

Brassware Livens Dull Background

Furnishes Good Contrast to Deep-Colored Furnishings.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

AGAINST a background of deep reds, blues and greens, brassware stands out in bright relief. And inasmuch as most fall furnishings in the way of rugs and drapes are in these soft colorful shades, attractive pieces of brass are much sought after.

Those shopping with this in mind should pay a visit to the stationery department of a downtown store. Here two large tables are devoted to the brass cause. Candlesticks with queer twisted stems divide into three holders at the top; others, less pretentious, consist of one holder perched on top of a straight stalk rising upward from a plain brass base. These are attractive items for either end of a mantel. Or one of them shows to fine advantage placed in front of a console mirror.

Incense burners in almost every design are exquisitely wrought. There are smoking sets complete with match box, ash tray and cigarette container. Besides, there are teapots, squat rounded things, with high arched handles, bon-bon dishes and a variety of trays.

One of the most popular items is a buffet bowl, large and low, set on a teakwood stand.

All of this brassware is conservatively priced at $1.

For the Dressing Table.

Mirror trays add glamour and glitter to an otherwise prosaic dressing table. As long as they can be purchased for as little as $1 why not take advantage of their dressy effect?

There are some specially priced which have little gold frames slightly above the level of the mirror. This enables them to hold powder box, atomizer, lipsticks and rouges without danger of these rolling off.

Ten-Point Girdle.

A certain girdle has ten points in its favor. Beside fitting like the paper on the wall, and toning down too emphatic curves, it may be recommended for its special low price of $1.09 and for these ten reasons:

1. It is two-way stretch lastex and proof against runs.
2. The top section is a satin acetate evening "bra."
3. The diaphram control is satin lastex and so attached that it will not "roll."
4. The "bra" is also attached in such a manner that it will stay firmly in place.
5. The "bra" is not only form-fitting, but designed to give uplift.
6. The garters are the new flat "velvet-grip."
7. There are adjustable straps over the shoulders.
8. The entire garment is washable.
9. The one-piece effect guarantees firm support and a smart silhouette.
10. It comes in three "bra" sizes, 32, 34, 36, and in small, medium and large.

Quite the nicest way to take dolly traveling is in a pullman car all her own. An interesting little F street shop has some of these miniature pullmans especially designed for a family of dolls. When they're folded up they look like a small suit case, but opened out there's a pullman section which can be made up into upper and lower berths. Besides, there's a compartment for the doll bedding, and a small closet for dolly's wardrobe.

Just think of the children who would love something like this in which to carry their dolls. And parents must admit that on a long trip things would be much easier if dolly and all her wardrobs had separate traveling quarters.

Satin Under Your Chin.

It's a hard struggle to resist the neckwear which has just taken a conspicuous place on the counters of a downtown store.

There are jabots, frills, and bibs, to say nothing of several other unclassified styles. Most of these are in soft frosted satin—an ideal material to wear close up around the neck for the most flattering results. You'll be surprised when you note their quality that the price is only a dollar.

Blending Is Key to Make-Up.

The secret of perfect make-up is blending. If there is a line of demarcation between rouge and powder, if rouge is like two round spots rudely painted, then the effect is hard and glaring. If, however, rouge fades into the powder, and powder into the rouge, so that the color looks natural rather than planted, the effect is harmonious.

To achieve this, well-blended effect is not so easy as talking would make it seem. There are many women who maintain that a powder brush is the only means of guaranteeing the smooth finish. One of the leading make-up men in Hollywood says he is virtually helpless without the powder brush to give the last fine touches.

Inasmuch as they are so much in demand and so valuable in the beauty scheme why not take advantage of those now especially priced in a local shop? They are small, with soft, bristles of excellent quality.

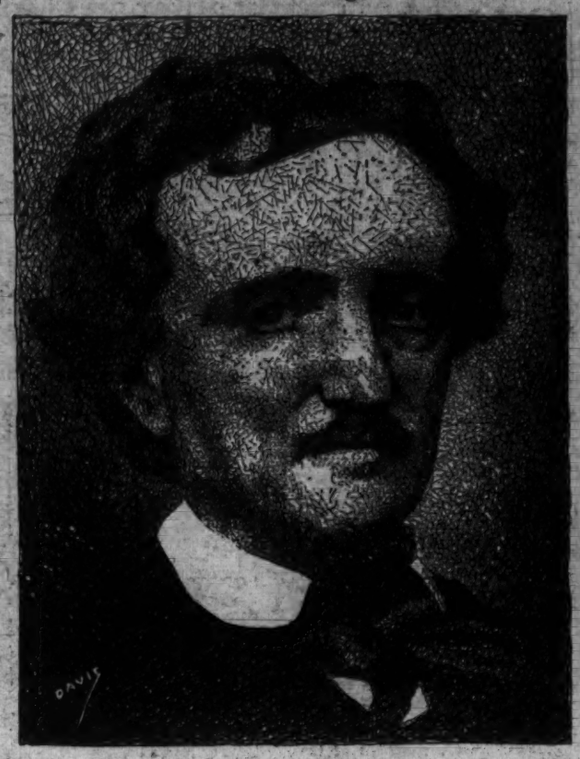
Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Edgar Allan Poe—Sara Elmira Royster.



"I think she loves me more devotedly than any one I ever knew," Poe wrote of Sarah Royster, belle of Richmond and sweetheart of his college days. For even though she disappointed him when she married another man, and is reputed to be the "lost Lenore" mentioned in "The Raven," she made the poet's last days happier by promising to marry him.

Choicest Poems Written to Curly-Haired Richmond Belle.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

FIRST love has its glory for poet and peasant, for prince and for pauper. No matter how many times a man may fancy he loves in his lifetime, none of these experiences is ever quite so sweet as his earliest romance.

It is 85 years ago this week since Edgar Allan Poe, American poet, sought to regain the sweetness of a first love, found again after both had been married to others and bereaved.

To love is as natural to poets as to breathe. And Edgar Allan Poe was no exception to this general rule. When other lads of 12 were dreaming of prowess on the playing fields of Richmond schools, Edgar Allan Poe was writing "To Helen," which some critics have declared the "greatest short poem in the English language." It was addressed to Jane Stith Stanard, the mother of a schoolfellow.

But not all of Poe's early poems were classics. There were other verses he tossed off lightly to the belles of Richmond that have earned a deserved obscurity.

The choicest poems were indited for Sarah Elmira Royster, a Richmond belle, who looked at him adoringly from beneath a tangle of curls. She was the daughter of a prosperous merchant and Edgar Allan Poe was the foster son of crusty John Allan, a wealthy man of Richmond whose grudging care for the lad was supplemented by petting and spoiling of the precocious child by Mr. Allan's good wife.

'Teen Age Romance.

Edgar and Sarah Elmira were in their early 'teens when the romance began. They were so young, in fact, that their boy and girl affection was regarded more or less indulgently by their parents. Whether or not they were engaged when he left for the University of Virginia in February, 1826, is of little moment now.

Edgar Allan Poe matriculated as the 136th student of the University. It had opened the year before and when he arrived at Charlottesville he saw before him noble buildings suggestive of that "glory that was Greece and the grandeur that was Rome" of which he had written in his poem, "To Helen," a phrase which is widely quoted today.

The visitor to the University of Virginia of today sees a tablet over room 13, West Range, where Poe lived for the scant year he was at the University. It states in Latin that this was "the small house of a great poet." It has been preserved much as it was when Poe was its occupant.

Sarah Elmira was the heroine of several of his college poems. We can imagine him reading them to companions as they sat about the fire in 13, West Range. But Sarah Elmira proved to be as fickle as one might have anticipated of so young and fascinating a belle. Out of sight it was out of mind with her and she coquetted with other beaux. Her letters, while they came at all, were most "unsatisfactory" and finally they stopped altogether.

When Poe crushed by gambling debts and the stern disapproval of John Allan withdrew voluntarily from the University of Virginia and returned to Richmond it was to find a cruel blow awaiting him. For Sarah Elmira was not there. Her heart had turned to another, a certain Mr. Shelton.

It was then that he wrote that short poem, "Alone," which tells so much in a few words of the youthful Poe. It is worthy of quotation:

Alone.

From Childhood's hour I have not been
As others were; I have not seen
As others saw; I could not bring
My passions from a common spring.
From the same source I have not taken
My sorrow; I could not awaken
My heart to joy at the same tone;
And all I loved I loved alone.
Then—in my childhood, in the dawn
Of a most stormy life—was drawn
From every depth of good and ill
The mystery which binds me still:
From the torrent, or the fountain,
From the red cliff of the mountain,
From the sun that round me rolled
In its autumn tint of gold;
From the lightning in the sky
As it passed me flying by,
From the thunder and the storm,
And the cloud that took the form
(When the rest of Heaven was blue)
Of a demon in my view.

Yet although Poe knew not of it then, she had not passed entirely out of his life. Elmira was to return there, a vital and potent influence, in the very last chapter of his brief span of living—as men count life.

Grew More Cheerful.

A world-scarred veteran of many vicissitudes, dragging his tragedy haunted spirit, but bearing on his brow a crown of laurels that neither time nor man could snatch from him, Poe came "home" to Richmond on July 14, 1849. Virginia Clemm was dead; he had broken the link between Helen Whitman and himself. Much of the darker side of his wanderings was unknown by the people of Richmond, though they did know of his meteoric flight to fame.

A whisper spread about that Poe's real errand was to woo again the lost love of his youth, Sarah Elmira Shelton, to whom he was said to have written many of his poems. Mrs. Shelton, now a widow with a substantial fortune, was not averse to the thought. It is said that Poe told her she was his lost "Lenore." Now what widow of 40-odd, fair—and perhaps fat—could withstand the subtle flattery of being a poet's dream. She invited him to her house, encouraged his stylus project and their renewed association resulted in a definite engagement of marriage.

Poe wrote to Mrs. Clemm on September 18, 1849, telling her of it. He declared in it: "Elmira (Mrs. Shelton) has just got home from the country. I think she loves me more devotedly than any one I ever knew and I can not help loving her in return."

Writing to Mrs. Clemm, Poe's mother-in-law and favorite aunt—Elmira herself attests her love for Poe and stated: "Edgar speaks frequently and very affectionately of your daughter and his Virginia, for which I love him but the more." She tells of his forthcoming trip to New York to see Mrs. Clemm, and adds: "It is needless for me to ask you to take good care of him when he is again restored to your arms. I trust a kind Providence will protect him, and that you will write to me. It has struck 12 o'clock and I am encroaching on the Sabbath. 'Good night, dear friend,' may Heaven bless you. Thus prays your attached tho' unknown friend. . . . ELMIRA."

Richmond Departure Delayed.

Thus vanishes Mrs. Elmira Royster Shelton out of the Edgar Allen Poe story, at a moment of great credit to herself, wherein she is portrayed as a kindhearted true woman.

Day after day Poe is delayed his departure from Richmond as if some hint of "unmerciful disaster" to come haunted his spirit. At last, on September 27, 1849, he took the Baltimore boat, saying farewell to Elmira—a long, long farewell, it proved to be.

On October 3, 1849, Poe was found dying on the streets of Baltimore. The true story of his plight has never been known and it is beyond discovery now. Yet, in a sense, it was highly appropriate that this word painter of horrors should find the stage of life set for his exit in the scenery of the weird, and in Baltimore, the home city of his heart.

For four days he lived, his ravings dealing with the subjects of his poems and stories. Then at 3 o'clock in the gray morning of October 7, 1849, he exclaimed, gently moving his head: "Lord help my poor soul!" "The fever called living" was over for Edgar Allen Poe.

Became Engaged Late in Life After Long Estrangement.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

What Is Indigestion?

The term indigestion has been bandied about from pillar to post until it has become well nigh meaningless. By the lay public, however, pain in the stomach, nausea, vomiting, belching and heartburn are called indigestion.

It has been clearly established that most symptoms arising in the stomach, such as those enumerated above, are due to one principal cause—namely: the inability of the stomach and the first portion of the bowel to move the food along. From many causes there may occur a constriction or partial closing of the stomach outlet. Pressure on the stomach wall follows and then pain. What causes the contraction of the outlet of the stomach is another matter and calls for careful investigation.

Stomach pain nearly always bears a definite relation to food. If the mucous membrane lining the stomach is inflamed pain will usually appear shortly after food is swallowed. If the pain comes on one or two hours after eating, gastric or peptic ulcer must be considered. If pain follows somewhat later, that is, within three hours after eating, duodenal ulcer is probably present. Tenderness that may be felt by pressing on the upper abdomen over the stomach may occur in any type of abdominal inflammation. Acute pain with nausea and vomiting usually suggest a recent inflammation of the lining of the stomach. Quite frequently pain is merely gas and spasm. On the other hand, abdominal pain stabbing in character may be due to perforation of an ulcer, and may call for quick surgical treatment.

Appendicitis is the least common cause of indigestion; in fact, Miller believes that the frequent reference to chronic appendicitis as causing digestive upsets is scarcely justified. He believes that chronic cases are usually symptomless and require treatment only when complicated by adhesions or by some constriction of the appendix itself.

Wrap-Around House Dress Does Not Slip Out of Place

Pattern No. 754.

THE WRAP-AROUND house dress has always been popular. From the standardized uniform type to the more dress-like version, the women who do most of their own housework have shown their preference for it. And no wonder—it is so comfortable and so easy to launder.

However, scanty wrap-around frocks are apt, on occasion, to swing open inconveniently. Today's design makes this quite impossible because the skirt wraps to the side back, where it joins the belt. The surplice collar is flattering and fresh, especially if it is made in white. A pattern for shorts is included.

The pattern is cut in sizes 36 to 46. In 35-inch material, size 40 requires 4¾ yards for the dress; ¾ yard for collar and 1⅝ yards for shorts.

THE MAN WITHOUT NERVES

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

Sam Cresson has been found dead in the London suburb of Sandyways, with indications that blackmailers may have driven him to suicide. A mystery man in the village is a chap named Tyssen, who seeks information about the tragedy for a novel he is writing. Only Anthony Sarson and his sister, Pauline, know that Tyssen plays golf like a professional, yet he denies being an expert.

Meanwhile, Anthony is in hot water. Returning from a dance late at night, he sees a car parked in a lonely lane near the isolated dwelling of Mme. de Sayal, and decides to investigate. As he approaches the house, she draws him inside, gives him a revolver for protection and sends him out. He is knocked unconscious, and next morning wakes to find himself inside again. She pledges him to secrecy, so when he returns to the village he says that he fell and lay unconscious all night. This statement might pass, except that Sir Julian Bott, London financier, has been found dead close to Mme. de Sayal's house that same night. Inspector Penny, of Scotland Yard, calls on her to question her. He asks if she knew Sir Julian.

"I HAVE been trying to remember," Mme. de Sayal confided. "I am not quite sure. If I have ever met Sir Julian Bott, our acquaintance is of the slightest."

"You don't think it is at all possible that he might have been on his way to call on you when he was shot?"

"Absolutely and entirely impossible," she answered. "Not a soul knows that I am here, and certainly I should not be likely to receive a caller at that hour of the night."

"Just so," the inspector murmured. "You heard no noise at all, I presume?"

"None. I slept quite soundly."

"You didn't hear a motor car?"

"Certainly not."

"Or the sound of a shot?"

"I heard nothing."

He sighed.

"That doesn't seem very hopeful," he remarked. "By the way, do you happen to be acquainted with a young man living down in the Oasis of the name of Anthony Sarson?"

She reflected for a moment.

"I believe that is the young man," she acknowledged, "with whom I have a sort of bowing acquaintance. I should not say that I know him, however, or any of these other people here. I say good morning, sometimes, if I pass them in the lanes. They seem to expect it."

Romantic Touch.

"Sociable folk, country people as a rule," the inspector murmured. "This young man, Anthony Sarson, though, he's different. He was at a public school and he's just down from the university. One gathers that he has been seen round this bungalow several times."

"Possibly," she admitted. "The land is not inclosed in any way at present."

"I have found an idea," the inspector went on, "amid several observant people, that the young man's wanderings in this locality might have been due to your residence here."

"That is quite possible," she acknowledged. "It lends a pleasant little touch of romance to the situation, at any rate."

"Supposing," the inspector continued—"you see we policemen sometimes have to draw upon our imagination and try a fancy reconstruction—supposing the young man was wandering about here last night and saw Sir Julian Bott approaching your bungalow.

"It is quite possible that he might have been angry and the two men have quarreled. You see the possibilities, even the probabilities, are so easy. You are, if you will permit me to say so in a professional sort of way, a very beautiful woman. Around the beautiful women of the world there has always centered tragedy."

No Basis of Fact.

Mme. de Sayal laughed softly and apparently with real amusement.

"A brave cast, Mr. Inspector," she said, "but an idea born and developed in your imagination only. I have spoken to the young man once.

"He is without interest for me or for him. I tell you this to save you wasting your time. As for Sir Julian Bott, I know no more what he was doing near my bungalow than you do, but I can assure you that he was not killed for love of me."

The inspector smiled happily.

"Now we are getting on, Madame," he declared. "You are treating me with admirable candor and you are making my task easy. Now that I know which theories I can reject, I may turn to new ones."

"If you leave me out of your fancies altogether," Madame observed, "you will stand a better chance of arriving at a solution."

The inspector stroked his chin thoughtfully.

"Madame," he begged, "please bear with me as well as you can. I am up against a problem, and when in my profession two extraordinary circumstances present themselves which are linked up together, you can understand that one is bound to seem pertinacious. First of all, Sir Julian Bott is discovered shot through the heart within 40 feet of your bungalow. There is no main road near. The natural premise is that he was on his way to visit you."

Just Coincidence.

"An extraordinary coincidence," she admitted.

"Now for the next one, madame," he continued. "One reads of you in Paris, and if there are great dinners or festivities on hand there is always the name of madame. At Monte Carlo she is continually dining with royalty. At Biarritz she is hunting with the duke. At Rome she is the guest of one of the great families and present at all the assemblies. Is it not a little hard for a comparatively ignorant person like myself believe, might it not be called also a curious coincidence, that madame comes to simplicity like this to paint a few pictures?"

Madame's fingers stole into a lacquer cigarette box by her side. She lit a cigarette and began to smoke.

"You see, inspector," she pointed out, "you are one of those persons who are deceived by the newspapers. You learn only of one side of my activities. That is where you are apt to form wrong conclusions. I possess a farmhouse between Rome and Leghorn compared to which these rooms are palatial. I have stone floors, open loggias, village-made furniture, yet I dwell there in great content in the season of the wild flowers. Then there is a little hunting box which belongs to me in Hungary, wilder still, perched on the edge of a precipice miles from any form of luxury, where one can eat and drink only what the land affords. In Paris—but why should I go on? There are two instances—and this. Believe me, I am a person of simple tastes. There is nothing extraordinary in my being here.

The inspector had suddenly become a more serious person. His face was furrowed with thought.

Strange Situation.

"Madame," he admitted, "you are right. There is nothing extraordinary in a woman of your catholic tastes being here. What I find extraordinary, having a problem to solve is this: That within 40 paces of your dwelling a man who arrived in a motorcar was found murdered last night, without your having heard a shot or the passing of the car. Where was he coming from? Where was he going? Upon what mission was he bent? And side by side with this, the young man who has been mooning about your bungalow at odd times during the last few weeks spent last night, according to his own story, within a few yards of your house, and staggered down this morning with a cock-and-bull story of having slipped while climbing a gate. Through all these different happenings madame apparently slept."

Madame rose to her feet. The inspector followed suit.

"It is the smell of the pines and a clear conscience which kept me asleep through all these excitements," she confided. "Some people fill a silk bag with the needles, you know, inspector, and keep it on their pillow. If you ever suffer from insomnia, you should try it."

"A spring mattress and a clear conscience need no opiates," the inspector remarked, as he took his leave.

Enchanted World.

Anthony Sarson had once more the idea, as he climbed the hill and passed out of sight among the pine trees, that he was wandering into some mysterious enchanted land full of exciting but sinister influences. There was nothing that night, however, in the appearance of the bungalow or of the woman whom he had come to visit to encourage such ideas. The windows were flung wide open, as though to invite the light evening breeze, and Mme. de Sayal was stretched at her ease outside, a wisp of green and white, on a chaise longue, with a book by her side and coffee and cigarettes at her elbow. She welcomed her visitor with a smile, simply lowering her book and pointing to the chair by her side.

"Come and sit down," she invited. "Will you have some coffee? There are cigarettes there. Tell me all the news."

"There is plenty for this quiet neighborhood," he assured her. "Yes, some coffee, please, and a cigarette, if I may."

She served him herself, pushed him over some cigarettes and carefully marking her book—it was the Italian life of one of the masters of the Renaissance—she leaned back to listen.

"In the first place, you know that they have identified the dead man?"

"Yes, I have heard that."

A Real Sensation.

"There will be a terrible sensation, of course," he went on, keeping his eyes fixed upon her. "Julian Bott was one of those men whom the newspapers always call 'emperors of finance.' He was at the back of at least a dozen big companies and supposed to be a multimillionaire."

"Yes, I have heard of Julian Bott," she admitted. "I suppose most people must have. I may even have met him. Of that I am not sure. Has anyone evolved any theory as to why he came to be lying dead within a few yards of my bungalow?"

"If the police have theories," Anthony replied, "they are not talking about them. The Scotland Yard man who is down here—an Inspector Penny—seems to like to work only through the telephone and through a haze of bluff. The sergeant is stupefied. Tom, our village constable, can do nothing but gasp. I ought to warn you, perhaps, that the first train from London tomorrow will probably bring down half a dozen newspaper men and photographers."

"I can easily see that the place will become intolerable," Mme. de Sayal observed. "You'll have been discreet?"

Tangled Emotions.

She turned her eyes and looked at him. Their cold questioning light in a way repelled him, but the little shiver which he felt was one of tangled emotions. This was the sort of woman, without a doubt, who might tamper with the wills of men.

"I have stuck to the same story," he told her. "No one absolutely believes me. The doctor has been up and examined the place where I told him that I fell, but although he is a pal, I am afraid that he was incredulous. I wish you would tell me something."

"Well?"

"Who did hit me on the back of the head because I came too near your bungalow? Was it the man who was standing at the corner a moment before? Who was it, anyhow?"

"How should I know?" she asked listlessly. "Anyhow, it was I who took care of you afterward."

"You were a good Samaritan," he admitted, "but I should like to find the person at the other end of the enterprise."

"Are you in any sort of trouble through this affair?" she asked.

"I believe," he replied, "that there are a good many people up in the village and even round here who believe that I murdered Julian Bott."

Capital Kitchen

By Susan Mills.

VEAL, the versatile meat, fills the bill for the heartiest family dinners, or lends itself to the making of the daintiest salads. It's clever at impersonations, too, and many's the time it has doubled for chicken in a cream gravy.

Veal birds are delicious for company dinner, or luncheon. A stew is a good dish for these cooler days, since it combines meat and vegetables into the same serving.

Try these recipes.

Veal Birds.

Cut veal cutlets into convenient pieces and flatten with a potato masher. Mix seasoned crumbs with chopped salt pork and chopped celery and make a stuffing. Roll up and tie into shape with strings. Brown in butter or lard. Add 1 cup of thin white sauce, cover and cook slowly for 40 minutes. This may be prepared in a casserole.

Veal Stew.

Ingredients for stew:
2 lbs. veal breast
⅛ lb. salt pork
2 teaspoons salt
1 cup peas
½ green pepper
2 tablespoons flour
Ingredients for dumplings:
2 cups flour
½ teaspoon salt
4 teaspoons baking powder
¾ cup diluted evaporated milk

Cut salt pork in cubes and fry until very light brown, add veal cut in pieces and let it brown lightly. Cover with cold water, add salt and cover closely. Let simmer 2 hours. Thicken with the flour stirred into a little water. Add peas and pepper.

Alluring Black Stockings Make Hose Go Somber

Deeper shades of hosiery are expected to be popular this winter, partly as a result of the revival of black hose. An off-black or Mascara shade is outselling black, dealers report, and equally popular is a deep brown, called mahogany, which looks well with either black or brown attire. Hose for evening wear are darker than last winter, a beige-like suntan being preferred to the natural skin tone.

Responsibility, Self-Denial and Work Are Prescribed for Upbringing of Youths

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I usually write letters like this, analyze myself and tear them up. But I believe I'm really going to send this as I think you might be able to help me better than I can help myself.

I am 20 years old. I was born impractical, but the world has made me practical. I work for a living, and find it necessary to contribute to the support of my parents.

Frankly, I have personality, am a ready conversationalist, and am attractive in appearance. I am supposed to have a very remarkable talent along a certain artistic line and I devote most of my leisure time to this creative outlet. Already I have won some small success, and I believe that if I continue my persistent efforts, I may be a real success by the time I'm 45 or 50 years old.

* * * *

Several years ago, I had ideals about marriage, home, children. But now, gradually, they are fading and I am beginning to think that I could find completeness in life in the pursuance of my career.

But I am not sure, not sure that I wouldn't be missing a great deal by cutting marriage, home, &c., out of my program. Not that I suppose I shall have any choice in the matter. I have never had many boy friends.

In business, I meet married men; occasionally, outside, men who are interested in my brains and not my beauty.

* * * *

You speak sometimes of joining State societies or other social groups in order to get acquainted with people. My financial program won't permit of even the smallest social indulgence to myself. I just don't meet the kind of young man I'd be interested in. And it isn't that I'm extra particular. I just have no opportunity to meet desirable men, socially—or any other kind.

Should I resign myself to the prospect of living a life to myself; forget about the old ideal of marriage, home, children, and look to my career for compensation? It gives me real happiness, and I don't believe I would want to give it up altogether for any man.

* * * *

And yet, quite frankly, Miss Haworth, I want some one to depend upon. Not now—my parents fill that need now—but later, perhaps, when they are gone. I do not want to be left alone. I want a companion who can be interested in culture and art and the better things of life; and yet some one who is not too highbrow to have a sense of humor.

Will I, in all probability, meet some one like this some day just by letting life take its course; or is there something I should be doing now? Or should I realize that my talent was meant to compensate; that my career is to be to me what marriage is to most girls?

* * * *

PERPLEXED.

Don't Be Defeatist

DEAR PERLEXED: At 20, it's absurd to speak of "resigning" one's self to any existing or even prospective condition in life.

However, it's a fine thing, at 20, to be able to look at one's self versus life as reasonably, as reflectively, as you do. It's very necessary to achievement to study the constallations in the sky one sets as the limit of one's possibilities and thoughtfully choose the star to which to hitch one's wagon.

* * * *

Your star, I believe, is marriage, a home, children, the understanding love of a husband who will be a protective, stimulating companion, sympathetic to your need of artistic self-expression.

A woman's possession of a great natural talent need establish no barrier against her experiencing a satisfactory emotional and social existence. A very few women might choose to develop the former to the exclusion of the latter; a majority would sacrifice the first for the second; and an intermediate number could successfully combine the two, making each complement the other, and thus arrive at a maximum achievement and a maximum happiness.

* * * *

For the present, list yourself in the third classification. As your life unfolds, and your preferences are more definitely formed on the forge of experience, you may find yourself inclining unmistakably, however, to the role of altogether-artist or altogether-wife and mother.

There is some likelihood the dearth of romantic and social opportunity in your life has caused you to seize on your artistic gift as emotional compensation for flesh-and-blood pleasures denied; that you are building a sort of Frankenstein instead of serving an exacting muse.

* * * *

The sort of girl you take care to make of yourself in the next few, highly important years, will determine very largely the kind of men you will eventually meet and attract. At 20, one's social horizon is limited to that established by one's home and family background. But at 25, a girl with charm, cultivated talents and intellectual curiosity is ready to leave the confines of a hand-me-down environment and step into a larger world of her own creating.

* * * *

Ninety-nine times out of a hundred, a clever, intelligent girl can obtain for herself the kind of man she makes up her mind she wants. One eminent psychologist advances the theory that our desire is the parent of our capabilities; if we want a thing with conscious, integrated ardor, the way opens for us to have it.

College Age for Boys Fixed At 18 or 19 by Mrs. Banfield

Less so-called self-expression and more guidance is what boys need today in the opinion of Mrs. P. Landon Banfield. She enjoys playing "mother" to the students at the Landon School for Boys.

Wife of Head of London School Believes They Should Be Forced to Take Part in Athletics and Dramatics.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

THE surest way to guide a boy through turbulent youth to successful manhood is to give him responsibilities, teach him self-denial, see that he has some sort of job, and keep him out of college until he is 18 or 19 years old.

This recipe for transforming a mischievous scamp into a worthwhile, satisfactory citizen has been formulated by Mrs. P. Landon Branfield, wife of the head of the Landon School for Boys. For five years, or ever since the school was founded, Mrs. Banfield has played "mother" to the students.

As a result of those five years' close association with boys from 8 to 18 years of age, she is a firm believer in the honor system, small allowances, odd jobs about the house, and forced participation in several activities.

"The 'teens are no time for specialization," said Mrs. Banfield yesterday. "If a boy is inclined to bury himself in books he should be made to take part in athletics, in dramatics, in games with other boys. Otherwise he'll grow up without understanding the importance of team work and competition. When he goes to college he'll be ill at ease with the other boys. And he'll have a difficult time adjusting himself to the business and professional world if he doesn't learn to play and work easily with others."

All Boys Like Athletics.

Every boy, no matter how bookish, has a latent liking for sports, Mrs. Banfield believes. She has noticed that boys who had to be forcibly persuaded to take part in games and contests soon needed no persuasion.

Far more common than the boy with a pronounced fondness for books is the boy with an aversion to them, she admitted.

"The boy with a quick mind but a dislike for study should be convinced he can not go out on the tennis court or ball diamond until he has done his lessons," she said.

Many parents expect too much of their sons in the way of grades, Mrs. Banfield believes. They not only want them to be the star of the class, they also want them to get through school as soon as possible, she added.

"And that's a great mistake," she declared. "No boy of 16 is mature enough to know what course he wants to take in college. Nor is he ready to cope with college problems and privileges. If he has been permitted to finish high school at 16 he should take post-graduate work at the high school. Under no circumstances should he be allowed to enter college. And wise parents and teachers will see to it that he doesn't finish high school before the average age, which is 18, I believe."

Opposes Corporal Punishment.

Physical punishment has no place in Mrs. Banfield's scheme of things.

"Goodness, I didn't know anybody believed in that any more," she laughed. "My idea is that denying a boy something he wants is a lot more effective punishment than paddling him with a hair brush—and a lot less embarrassing for the parents. The punishment should never be the same twice, even for the same act of disobedience. When a boy knows what is going to happen to him if he runs away for an afternoon, he can weigh the penalty with the crime. He can say to himself, 'well, what if I don't get to go to the movie Saturday night? I'd rather go fishing this afternoon than go to the show.'"

But if he doesn't know what the penalty is to be, he's more likely to fear the consequences of his going away without leave, in the opinion of Mrs. Banfield. He's likely to stop and think: "Perhaps they'll take my bicycle away for a week; perhaps they won't buy me that new football." If his parents are smart, he never knows what is going to happen to him for his offense or disobedience.

It's a good idea for a boy to have small tasks to perform in the house or in the garden, Mrs. Banfield believes.

"Not always the same task," she advised. "Let him mop the kitchen floor one week, cut the grass the next week, and so on down the long list of odd jobs. This work will do much more than keep him out of mischief. It will teach him a new respect for his home and inspire him to be more tidy. If he has to pick papers off the floor he's not so likely to throw them there."

Splendid Training in Jobs.

Working for other employers than his parents is splendid training for the boy, Mrs. Banfield believes. She sees no harmful effects in selling papers, running errands, and all the other small, part-time jobs.

There's nothing like a job for teaching responsibility and there's nothing more valuable for a boy to learn than responsibility toward others," she said.

If a boy does not earn his own spending money, his allowance from his parents should not exceed $2, in the opinion of Mrs. Banfield.

"And it won't hurt him to use part of that $2 for clothes and other necessities," she added. "Self-denial is as important as a sense of responsibility in the building of a worthwhile person."

When parents forbid their son to do anything they should explain carefully why they are forbidding it. They should reason with him, Mrs. Banfield said.

"If explaining and reasoning do no good, the parents should simply say 'No' and mean it," she continued. "I've never had much sympathy for those foolish fathers and mothers who let little Johnny tear apart the porch furniture in the belief he is expressing himself. Less so-called self-expression and more guidance is what most boys need."

AFTER A STORM gulls fly in silver wheels—
Seeing their glint-winged rhythm one would say,
"God is unwinding them from silver reels"—
Wheel within spinning wheel, the gulls at play;
Smooth as a burnished hoop they turn, they turn,
Curving in silver music in the sky;
If for a flaming while the sun should burn
Upon them, beauty does not slay—nor die!
Over the painted marsh against the massed
Retreated storm clouds, gulls in mystery,
In a silver mystery go wheeling past—
Taking a respite from the somber sea—
Rhymed as music from Olympian flutes;
And the white moon bows and Ixion salutes!

LIFE MUST BE lived to a strident horn
That is blown by the leering huntsman, Fate.

Should revel in life and should dare to chant
As we hold the hounds of death at bay!

We Never Left Our Love Unsaid.

WE NEVER LEFT our love unsaid,
But always made it plain with speech.
With words we cried it each to each;
Where only silences can reach
We thought by words to touch and tread;
With words our love was overspread,
With words, with words are hearts are wed.
We never left our love unsaid,
We never let it take its way
Unwached and hid; too little dread
We had of love, of love's strange sway.
With words we watched our love decay,
With words we mourned it, with words we pled
And followed after where it fled
And would not leave its death unsaid.

Migration.

MIGRATING LINES of geese fly straight and sure
Along an arch of cloudy autumn sky.
They go to southern lands until the eye
No longer follows their spent path. The lure
Of life and their divine urge will endure.
It brings them here and takes them back. They fly
Through all earth's labyrinth's, soar low, mount high,
And reach the home they left, with fate secure.

Our lives are like migrations of a bird.
We come from heaven to linger while we may.
The growing fragrance of our years will wane
From summer, until as a mist is blurred,
Our autumn fades to winter's chilling gray,
And we return to paradise again.

Relatives Get Formal Honor From Chinese

American Informality Not Considered Proper in One's Family.

"SO'S YOUR Aunt Emma" is an American comeback that wouldn't be allowed to roll off the tongue of even the glibest Chinese flapper. Not that Chinese girls haven't plenty of Aunt Emmas, nor that their Aunt Emmas are more privileged than other Chinese aunts. But one just doesn't get familiar enough over there to mention the name of any elder relative out loud.

One does, however, number one's aunts and uncles and address them, (in Chinese, of course), as Aunt Number Three on my father's side, or My Second Eldest Uncle on my mother's side. To blurt out boldly and unceremoniously: "Good morning, Uncle Oscar!"—ah, that would be blasphemous indeed, in the land of noble and respected elders.

Won M. I. T. Scholarship.

But American informality, and even some American slang, is charming in it's proper invironment. So concedes pretty Miss Chou Meiu, youthful supervisor of nursing in the mass education movement of Ting Shien, who is visiting Miss Anne McCabe, supervisor of the Visiting Nurse Society here, before she returns to her post in the Orient.

Miss Chou Meiu, who was a student under Miss McCabe at the Peiping Union Medical School, and later one of her assistants at the Peiping Municipal Health Demonstration Station, won a scholarship last year to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. There, specializing in public health work, she graduated with third highest honors in her class last June. Following commencement, she spent the summer in the mountains of Kentucky and Tennessee, studying county health demonstration work.

Although admiring American customs, Miss Chou Meiu completed her year's training at the Massachusetts college without once having donned American dress.

Beautiful—For U. S. Girls.

"Your styles are very beautiful, on American girls," she said. "But they do not suit the Oriental contour or complexion. When the Oriental woman adopts, wholesale, the American mode of dress and manner, she is apt to lose her perspective, some of her ideals and much of her philosophy. She becomes neither an Oriental nor an Occidental, and consequently can accomplish little of lasting benefit for either."

Speaking of the difficulty of learning the Chinese language, Miss Chou said that much of this would be surmounted if the foreigner took the trouble to study the Oriental philosophy first.

"Getting the viewpoint of any people makes the principles of their language more understandable," she said. "When we learn English, we get the thought pattern of your people first. The words follow automatically.

"The matter of proper names demonstrates one difference of viewpoint between our peoples. Over here you take your family names for granted. Ours is a country of ancestor worship. Consequently, our surnames (we have only only about 100 of them altogether) come first, our given names last.

"We call only our inferiors by their given names. Even our brothers and sisters, whom we consider our equals, are referred to, not by their given names, but by words that mean elder brother, baby sister, second eldest brother, and so on. One should understand these customs and attitudes first, and the Chinese language will come more easily."

Fly Catchers of 1800's Were Elaborate Affairs

Methods of catching flies are almost as old as flies themselves. The most popular device for fly destruction in the early nineteenth century consisted of an ingenious glass bottle about 10 inches high and 24 inches in diameter. The lower edge of this contraption was sheared and turned up to form a small trough. A regulation neck and stopper finished off the top.

Sugar or sirup was placed in the bottle so it would fall around the large opening at the bottom. Three small legs held the affair high enough so flocks of flies could enter. The biggest drawback to this arrangement was the fact that a good many flies were smart enough to learn the entrance could also be used as an exit.

PILLAR to POST

SOCIAL workers at play are not so inhibited as one might imagine. There was a particularly jolly table at the banquet attended by the delegates to the 1934 Mobilization for Human Needs Conference at the Mayflower the other night. At this board sat a juvenile court judge, an executive secretary of the Red Cross, a National director of the Travelers Aid Society, a Community Chest president, and several others in allied fields who had not previously met.

These workers, who had been listening all day to grave problems, relaxed at the dinner and told stories.

* * * *

Miss Bertha McCall, general director for Traveler's Aid, told of an old lady who got off the train in New York and left with the agent of the Traveler's Aid a large box which contained cigars. Every little while the owner of the box would return and take some of the cigars out of the station with her. The agent found out that the old lady took the cigars on bus rides about New York and whenever she saw a particularly shabby man coming along, she would drop a cigar in front of him "so he would believe in God."

* * * *

Edmund Barry, president of the Memphis Community Chest, told of the woman who hired a green Negro girl from the country as a maid. She was asked to answer the telephone in another room, and returning was asked what was the message.

"Jes somebody on de phone say New Yawk is a long distance, and I tol' dem it shuah was."

Mrs. Judge, of the Travelers Aid, told of a man who was bitten by a dog suspected of having rabies. The dog was killed, his brain examined for the dread disease, and the suspicions confirmed. The man was rushed to the hospital. Later he was found sitting up in bed writing on a piece of paper. They asked him if he were writing his will.

"No," he answered, "I am writing a list of the people I want to bite."

Brighter and More Glamorous Colors Being Used in Make-up

New Shades of Rouge, Lipstick and Powder Needed to Conform With Latest Fashion Ideas of Paris and Hollywood.

By Frances Mangum.

COLOR has a leading role in the winter beauty pageant.

Reports from Paris and Hollywood say that make-up must be more glamorous and vivid than at any time before.

In contrast to years past when women wore a rose or scarlet rouge, a light or dark powder and a bright or dull lipstick, they are reaching out for dozens of shades of rouge, seeking those complementary to the color of their dresses, deciding on those best for evening and daytime wear. They are striving for harmony between rouge and lipstick and choosing powders that suit the natural skin tone.

Nor are they stopping here. Mascaras, green or blue, are supplanting the staid shades, brown and black. Eye shadows are even less conservative. Popular shades now are violet, bronze, silver and gold-flecked blue and green.

In the evening certain luminous powders in green or mauve give an exotic shade to the face. Lipsticks are made now so they impart a moist sheen to the lips.

All in all it is impossible to survey the season's make-up chart without being impressed with the vividness and richness of cosmetics.

The very blonde woman must be careful, however, not to harden her face by too much emphasis on conspicuous colors. With very light hair and naturally light eyebrows and lashes, brown mascara is her best bet. If, however, she is a dark blonde, the blue or green mascara is likely to suit her to perfection. Types "in-between" will find that the colored mascaras are more flattering than black. Nevertheless a brunette with olive skin and black eyes can very well afford to use the dark tints.

Most eye shadows are not recommended for daytime wear, but the violet shade, if applied lightly, very lightly, over the lower part of the lide gives a soft shadowy effect. If it is put on too heavily the violet color tends to make the eyes appear tired.

If rouge is applied high on the cheeks, it will tend to enliven the eyes and bring out their color. However, if the cheek bones are high, rouge should be smoothed on lower to lessen their prominence.

What Today Means

"Libra."

IF OCTOBER 1 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:15 to 11:15 a. m., from 2:15 to 4:15 p. m. and from 6:15 to 8:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:15 to 8:15 a. m., from 12:15 to 2:15 p. m. and from 8:15 to 10:15 p. m.

There are always a certain number of people whose predatory nature makes them dangerous for those of a trustful disposition. On this October 1 it might prove wise to keep your eyes open for a predacious type of individual, so be careful in any dealings you may have with him.

Social activities may turn out unusually successful from every point of view if planned on this date. Married and engaged couple, as well as those anxious to become plighted, will do well to consult each other's wishes on any matter a third or disinterested party might bring up involving their mutual interests.

If a woman and October 1 is your natal day, your clear reasoning powers, as well as your ability to discover what is back of the average motive actuating actions that might puzzle the ordinary person, should prove a great asset and in a business career may help you greatly. You should avoid environment or employment where there is confusion or excessive noise.

If a man and October 1 is your birthday, you are very discerning, level-headed and capable of exercising excellent judgment. A professional career in the legal, medical, engineering or architectural vocation might enable you to gratify your ambition. Commercial life also has great possibilities for a man of your abilities.

THE BABE bowed out yesterday. The end of a 22-year trail, strewn with records fashioned by his bludgeoning bat, greeted BabeRuth at Griffith Stadium where Washington to the number of 12,000 assembled to watch the King of Diamonds abdicate. It was his last game as a regular with the Yankees, a voluntary relinquishment of his post.

Babe bowed out as a loser, what with the Yankees dropping a 5-3 decision to the Nats, but no single defeat could mar the memory of the Big Fellow's deeds of the past, which, after all, were the excuse for the party.

Belongs to Ruth.

Nor did the fact that Ruth's potent bat fail to ram even as much as a single to the outfield terrain against Washington's rookie pitching, cloud Washington's tribute to the Big Fellow. The show belonged to Ruth, as the presence of 12,000 who turned out for the ball game, as meaningless as an icicle in Little America, attested.

Those pipestem legs carried the great hulk of a man that is Ruth down the first base line for the last time in a regular role. That waddling sprint that has become his curiously mincing steps now were lost to baseball's daily menu. That robust swing was being framed in its natural setting for the final time.

School Band Plays.

But yesterday, in his mind's eye, he saw his own humble beginning as baseball's big shot. There at home plate in the pregame ceremonies, was the St. Mary's Industrial School Band, of Baltimore, rendering the same airs that the Big Fellow heard as a lad before he fared forth from the same orphanage to make his way in baseball.

With bared heads, the players of both teams stood at the plate as the Big Fellow was presented with a parchment of thousands of signatures of his admirers in Washington and environs, their tribute to this man whose home-run feats rocketed baseball into unprecedented heights.

Babe's Appreciation.

The Big Fellow spoke his appreciation into the amplifiers. He said: "It is with great satisfaction that I receive this fro mthe fans of Washington. I've always considered the Washington fans my best friends, and this touching tribute is something I shall cherish as long as I live and one thing I want my family to cherish for generations to come.

"I hope to play baseball as long as I am able to be of use to my team, perhaps two or three times a week next season."

And then he went into the ball game. But no semblance of a base hit bounced off his lusty bat. The rookie pitcher, Orville Armbrust, retired him in the first inning on a fly to center field. On his next apeparance he was walked. A harmless grounder to Buddy Myer, he drilled on his third trip to the plate. Came the seventh, one man on base and the Yankees trailing by two runs.

Thomas Is Sent In.

Acting Manager Schacht withdrew the rookie Armbrust, sending in Al Thomas to face the big fellow. Perhaps Schacht did not want Ruth's regular career to end on the sour note of a base on balls that Armbrust might give him. Anyway, Thomas flung a suspicious-looking first pitch down the alley to the Babe. Away it went, taking the long route to deep center field, where Jake Powell gathered it in.

With that, Ruth doffed his cap, waved a farewell to his admirers, and dashed to the dressing room. It was finis.

The shadow that had been enveloping Ruth in the final years of his playing career, Lou Gehrig's

Six Youngsters Seek Women's Golf Title

National Championship's Qualifying Round Starts Today.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 30 (AP).—Six starry-eyed youngsters, averaging 16 years in age and playing in the blue-ribbon event of American women's golf for the first time—the National championship—stand out prominently in the challenge of 148 to the continuation of the two-year reign of Virginia Van Wie, who begins defense of her title tomorrow.

The championship opens at 8 a. m. with an 18-hole qualifying round. The qualifying fold is limited to 64 and six rounds of play will follow within a space of five days, with the 36-hole test on Saturday. All intervening matches will be at 18 holes.

The six precocious competitors—the youngest is 14 and the oldest 17—along with 12 foreign entries—make the thirty-eighth annual tournament the greatest ever held in this country in addition to giving it its most pungent international flavor.

Miss Jameson Outstanding.

The outstanding performer of the youthful contingent is 16-year-old Betty Jameson, of Dallas, winner of the Southern championship.

Rated after the blonde Texan is 17-year-old Pamela (Pam) Barton, the stocky English lass, who startled British golf disiples this summer by going to the finals of her native championship. She played the course today for the first time and impressed a small gallery with her tremendous power with her woods.

Dorothy Kirby, 14, of Atlanta, who won the 1934 Georgia State championship, is, like her famous fellow citizen, Bob Jones, playing in a National championship for the first time at 14 years of age and in the Phiadelphia district. Jones made his bow in the amateur at Merion in 1916. The other youngsters are Betsy MacLeod, of Buffalo, 16; Gail Wild, of Cranford, N. J., 17, and Dorothy Traung, 16, of San Francisco.

The not remote possibility of the title going abroad for the first time since 1913, when Glad Ravenscroft took it back to England, must be reckoned seriously, what with the British invasion, including Molla Gourlay, Mrs. J. G. ("Pat") Walker, Diana ("Pete") Plumpton, Mrs. George Coats, Mrs. Alex Gold, Doris Chambers, Diana Fishwick and Wanda Morgan, in addition to Pam Barton, from England; Ada Mackenzie, former Canadian titlist, and Mrs. F. J. Mulqueen, of Toronto, and Nancy Pearman, Bermuda champion.

Face Stiff Opposition.

In opposition to the challenges of these juveniles and feared foreign stars are such sturdy American campaigners as Glenna Collett Vare, five times former champion; Maureen Orcutt, of Englewood, N. J.; Charlotte Glutting, of South Orange, N. J.; Mrs. Leona Cheney, San Gabriel, Calif., and Mrs. Opal Hill, of Kansas City.

The original field of 157 was reduced to 149 this afternoon with the announcement of eight withdrawals. The withdrawals were Mrs. B. T. Meckley, of Silver Spring, Md.; Peggy Wattles, of Buffalo; Mrs. Mary Wallace, jr., of Clayton, Mo.; Mrs. Frederick P. Lindh, of New York; Abigail Vare, of Philadelphia; Carolyn Brown, of San Antonio, Tex.; Mary Parkinson, of Boston, and Mrs. Richard Clemson, of Middletown, N. Y.

Tigers Win Twin Bill, Add 101st Triumph

DETROIT, Sept. 30 (AP).—Scoring their one hundredth and first victory of the 1934 season by sweeping a double-header with the St. Louis Browns today, the Detroit Tigers ended their American League schedule and prepared to meet the invasion of the Cardinals here next week.

Detroit won the double-header, 10 to 6, and 6 to 2, Manager Cochrane getting a chance to work out all four of the pitchers he plans to use in the world series. Crowder and Rowe worked during the first game and Bridges and Auker during the second. Marberry and Hogsett, the two important relief pitchers, worked in the first and second games, respectively.

Browns in Slugging Mood.

The Browns got 16 hits off the Crowder-Rowe-Marberry combination in the first game, while the Tigers were getting 14 off Newsom, Knott and Walkup. The second game saw the Tigers pounding Blaeholder, Coffman and Andrews for a dozen hits, while the Browns were getting six off the successive offerings of Bridges, Auker and Hogsett.

Detroit put the opener away in the first three innings. They got four runs and four hits off Newsom in the first inning. In the third they fell on Knott for five hits and four more runs. In the nightcap Bridges held St. Louis hitless for the first four innings, while the Tigers were rounding out a four-run margin.

Western Maryland Ready for Villa Nova

Westminister, Md., Sept. 30 (Spl.). The Western Maryland eleven will meet Villa Nova at Villa Nova, Pa., Saturday in the opening game of the season.

Coach Dick Harlow asserted yesterday that scrimmage with Gettysburg College and a weeding out process has practically determined the team that will start against Villa Nova.

Tigers' Leader Is Confident Of Victory

Cochrane Names Line-Up; Hurling Choice Waits on Weather.

DETROIT, Sept. 30 (AP).—The regular season completed without an injured player on his squad, Mickey Cochrane, who piloted and pushed his Detroit Tigers to the first American League pennant they have known in a quarter century, tonight gave his undivided attention to the coming World Series campaign.

The uncertainty of the National League pennant fight that was not removed until the St. Louis Cardinals and the New York Giants had played their final games today did not bother Cochrane at all.

Throughout the final days of the pennant battle Cochrane asserted his group of .300-plus batters would be just as effective against the confident Deans of St. Louis or Carl ubbell and the best of Terry's New York Giant tossers.

To Shun Limelight.

Cochrane and his charges attended a banquet arranged by a group of fans lHast night, saw a number of them eat cake, receive a shower of gifts and otherwise bask in the comforting atmosphere of adulation. Then he intimated that the first step of his preparation for the World Series would be to get his athletes temporarily out of the limelight until they go out on Navin Field for the opening game of the big series.

Cochrane is confident the Tigers will win the series. "There would be no point at all the hard work we put in to win the American League pennant unless we were pointing also for the world championship," he observed.

Points to Giants.

At the same time, the Tigers' energetic leader directed attention to what happened to the New York Giants in the final days of the regular season as a concrete example of the uncertainties of baseball. A fortnight ago, he pointed out, the Giants had a lead that seemed to show them coasting to the finish.

Cochrane has decided upon his lin-up for the opening game, but the pitching assignment still appears to be dependent upon a number of circumstances. Some time ago Mickey was understood to have definitely determined that "Schoolboy" Rowe, ace of the Tiger pitching squad, would get the mound assignmetn in the initial game. That was at a time when the weather was warm and the Schoolboy warmed up "right."

May Start Crowder.

If the fates favor the fans and the players with a warm day for the series opener, Rowe undoubtedly will start for Detroit. But a chilly day almost certainly will mean the veteran "General" Alvin Crowder as the Tiger hurler. Crowder and Rowe got a warming-up in the first game of today's doubleheader and each was hit freely.

Next in line to Rowe and Crowder is Tommy Bridges. These three appear to be the likely starters in the first three gams of th series, with the possibility that Rowe or Crowder may be called back for the fourth. Although there is a chance Elden Auker may get into one of the games. Mickey, of

Dizzy Dean Allows Only 7 Hits, Fans 2 With Bases Filled in 9th; Brooklyn Wins in 10th With Rally

Star Hurler Wins 30th of Season as Mates Amass 14 Blows.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 30 (AP).—Baseball's most amazing pennant rush since the campaign of George Stallings and his "Miracle Men" of Boston ended in glorious triumph today as the St. Louis Cardinals nailed the National League flag to their masthead with a rousing 9 to 0 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

The stirring drive started on the morning of September 7, when the Cardinals trailed the then formidable looking New York Giants by seven full games. The great Dizzy Dean sttled it all beyond a doubt today, in the ninth inning of his great huring performance against the lowly but bristling Reds.

Three on, None Out.

If a showman had arranged it, he couldn't have staged a more dramatic finish than that of today. Given his wide lead, the great Dizzy was pitching his heart out at the start of the ninth for his seventh shut-out of the year. As Pool singled, Schulmerich doubled and Comorosky walked to fill the bases with none out, his dream of becoming the shut-out king of the major leagues faded.

Then came the final flash from the Brooklyn-Giant game. The Dodgers had won; the pennant belonged to the Cardinals for sure. Grinning in that cocksure way of his Dizzy arose to the heights then. He struck out Clyde Manion, and Ted Petroskey, a pinch hitter for Frey, and then pumped a fast one down the middle to little Sparky Adams, who fouled out to Bill DeLancey.

30th of Season.

As the ball stuck in De Lancey's Glove, Dizzy ran over to his batterymate, snatched the ball and just barely succeeded in reaching the dugout before the frenzied fans surged over the diamond, cheering him for his thirtieth victory of the season and the first pennant since 1931.

A crowd of 35,274 pennant fevered spectators watched the big Cardinal guns roar and Dizzy turn in his masterpiece today. As the eccentric righthander held the reds to seven hits—All of them coming in separate innings except the two bunched blows in the ninth—the Cardinals turned loose devastating power to crush the enemy.

14-Hit Attack.

Every player except Ducky Medwick had a hand in the 14-hit attack against the three Red hurlers—Cy Johnson, Benny Frey and Allyn Stout. Two of the blows were homers, one by De Lancey in the fifth and the other by Rp Collins, who got his thirty-fifth circuit blow and his two-hundredth hit of the season in the seventh to score two runs.

In a few instances, the gods of fortune were with the Cardinals today as the Reds lost opportunities because of freakish bounces of blows with hit labels on them and because of spectacular defense support of Manager Frisch's men. But from the fourth inning on, when the Cards pushed over three more runs to run their lead to 5 to 0, the result never was in doubt.

Open Assault in First.

The new champions opened their assault in the first inning after Pepper Martin had started with a strikeout. Jack Rothrock drove a vicious single through Johnson, stopped at second as Frisch singled and went to third as Collins walked to fill the bases. De Lancey then drove a high one against the right field screen to score Frisch and Rothrock. A nice running catch by Pool of Orsatti's line drive ended the assault.

In the fourth, the Cards took every advantage of Johnson's sudden wildness. Big Cy Hit Collins with a pitched ball, and Manion let

New York Spotted Four Runs in First Frame, Then Defeated.

POLO GROUNDS, N. Y., Sept. 30 (AP).—The inglorious debacle of the 1934 Giants passed into baseball history along with the National League season today as the enraged Brooklyn Dodgers did it again, this time, 8-to-5, and completed the task of vengeance they set for themselves—the boosting of the St. Louis Cardinals right into the world series with Detroit.

They did it again, these fantastic, downtrodden, ball-playing demons from the other side of the East River, hammering home the answer to Bill Terry's now famous query—"Brooklyn? Are they still in the league?" It didn't matter much that St. Louis, clubbing the Reds again, 9-to-0, while the Dean boys held their arms, needed no assistance closing out the campaign, and the greatest closing surge in baseball history, by the safe margin of a two-game lead.

Three Runs in 10th.

Faced with a four-run deficit at the start, due to the Giants ganging on Ray Benge for four hits and a couple of bases on balls, the Dodgers, playing like world champions themselves, ran right through the shattered titleholders and their all-star staff of Fred Fitzsimmons, Hal Schumacher, and Carl Hubbell to win a delirious ball game, finally, with a three-run rally off the great southpaw in the tenth.

But long before that, though they never gave up, the Giants knew they were through. Inning by inning the score board showed the Cardinals piling up runs on the Reds, and for the Giants to tie and force the first play off series in major league history, the Reds had to win.

Blows Up in Eighth.

Fitzsimmons, in trouble often through the 7 1-3 innings he pitched, had blown up finally in the eighth with the score still 5 to 4 in the Giants' favor, the Margin being Freddy's personal home run in the fourth off young "Dutch" Leonard, a splendid relief man

Trojans Held to 6-0 Victory by Pacific in Most Stunning U. S. Grid Surprise

Santa Clara Deadlocks Stanford

Duke, W. & L., Ga. Tech Register Important Dixie Triumphs.

NEW YORK, Sept. 30 (AP).—The twin achievements of two of the Far West's smaller college teams—Santa Clara and College of Pacific—stood out prominently today as football fans reviewed the results of an otherwise routine opening of the 1934 season.

While major teams were performing elesewhere just about as expected, Stanford and Southern California, two of the power-house outfits of the Pacific Coast conference, were the victims of heroic stands by these two underdogs.

Held to 6-to-0 Score.

Of the two, College of Pacific, coached by the veteran Amos Alonzo Stagg, provided the most stunning surprise in holding Southern California to a 6-to-0 score. Clipper Smith has been turning out first-class elevents at Santa Clara for some years, and the Broncos' feat of tying Stanford, 7-to-7, was not quite such a shock.

College of Pacific not only held the Southern California Huskies nine times for downs, but came within 3 yards of a touchdown shortly after the Trojans had scored the game's only points in the third quarter. A fourth-down pass, however, wats intercepted on the 1-yard line and Stagg's youngsters never could threaten again.

49-Yard Drive.

A fourth-period drive that carried 49 yards, with De Rosa's great passing a feature, gave Santa Clara its draw with Stanford before a crowd of 45,000 amazed spectators. Stanford was a 2-to-1 choice at game time, but the Indians tired rapidly in the latter stages of the game.

The Far West furnished another surprise when Oregon uncorked a great running attack to bury U. C. L. A., 26-3, in one of the day's three Pacific Coast conference games. Washington and Washington State won the others, the former beating Idaho, 13-0, and Washington State trouncing Montana, 27-0. California rolled up 87 points in a double-header with California Aggies and Nevada.

L. S. U. and Rice Tie.

In the Southwest, Rice held Louisiana State to a 9-9 draw and Texas A and M. was deadlocked, 14-14, by Texas A. and I. Southern Methodist, Baylor and Texas Christian all won easily, but Arkansas was extended in a 13-to-0 conquest of College of Ozarks.

Duke, Washington and Lee, Georgia Tech and Vanderbilt all hung up important triumphs in the South. Corky Cornelius and Jack Alexander led Duke's Blue Devils to a 46-0 decision over Virginia Military; Washington and Lee took advantage of a blocked punt in the fourth quarter to down Kentucky, 7-0; Vanderbilt overcame Mississippi State's stubborn resistance to win, 7-0, and Georgia Tech eked out a 12-7 verdict over Clemson in a game that was much closer than had been expected. Carl Snavely at North Carolina and Hunk Anderson at North Carolina State made auspicious coaching debuts as the former outpointed Wake Forest, 21-0, and State won from Davidson, 7-0. Sewanee's 2-0 defeat by Southwestern of Tennessee was the only real surprise.

Nats Win

own potent bat, yesterday legthened even more ominously. Ruth was the nominal hero yesterday, but the actual heroics were performed by the man who gradually has usurped his home run throne. Lou Gehrig smashed out his forty-ninth home run of the season, slammed a single and a double, extended his record of consecutive games to 1,504, won the batting championship of the league and the honor of driving in more runs than any other player this season.

Score Five in Fifth.

In one uproarious assault against Red Ruffing, the Nats won the ball game, blasting a 2-0 Yankee lead out of being with a five-run splurge in the fifth inning.

Johnny Stone was the hero of the uprising, delivering a triple to the right eld wall over the head of the helpless Ruth and driving three runs across the plate.

Young Armhurst held that lead, with a six-hit game in his possession going into the eighth inning, after parceling out single runs to the Yanks in three different innings. Thomas, who relieved him in the tighth, saw the game sealed in the ninth when Bluege started a double play on Heffner's grounder.

But that ball game had been only an anticlimax. Unlike Hamlet, the Babe, not the play, was the thing.

Giants Lose

after Benge departed. Hal Schumacher was warming up and Bill Terry and Blondy "Slogan" Ryn, the great conferers of the 1933 world series triumph over Washington, were talking it over in the box.

Up on the board went a big 3 for the Cards in the fourth at St. Louis, making the Red Bird lead 5 to 0, with Jerome "Dizzy" Dean in command. A crowd of 44,055 that booed the Giants loudly at every opportunity and cheered themselves into a frenzy at every neat move of the Dodgers, nearly blew blondy and Terry down with one mad howl of triumph.

Breaks Into Grin.

Ryan looked at the score board and shook his head. Terry looked and shook his head. Blondy broke into a rueful grin. Terry turned and slumped back to first base. Nothing much mattered therefore, all chance for the pennant had departed with Brooklyn's 5-to-1 victory behind young Van Mungo yesterday.

Dizzy then forced De Lancey at the plate, but Martin came through to drive a single to center, scoring Orsatti and Durocher.

DeLancey Hits Homer.

De Lancey's home-run brought in run number six in the fifth. As Stout relieved Frey in the seventh, Medwick walked and Collins pumped his homer over the right field pavilion. The final Cardinal run came in the eighth when De Lancey drove in Frisch with his third hit.

Rest of Line-Up.

Aside from the pitching assignments the Tigers will line up for the opening game as follows: White, cf.; Cochrane, c.; Gehringer, b.; GGreenberg, 1b.; Goslin, lf.; Rogell, ss.; Owen, 3b.; Fox, rf.

The demand for reserved seats for the local games of the sries continued unabated today, although all the numbered seats in the park already have been allotted. Telegrams and telephone calls continued to pour in at the club offices and to other sources where "influence" was supposed to exist.

The reserved seat ticket reservations have been handled entirely by mail, and as yet not one has been issued or paid for. Each successful applicant for reserved seats has been mailed an identification card which he must present in person when calling for his allotment.

A. & P. Stores To Celebrate 75th Birthday

Patten, Oldest Employe, Tells Story of Early Establishments.

Ninety thousand employes in 15,000 stores throughout the Nation today begin the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co.

The company started in 1859 with a single store in Vesey street, New York, and J. T. Patten, of that city, the oldest living member of the organization, tells the story of its growth.

"My first job with the A. & P. was in May, 1875," he said. "The company was then 16 years old and had only 12 stores, but a large mail order business.

"I well remember the first store I worked in. We sold only tea and coffee. Blending was done locally—if a customer found a blend too weak or too strong, she brought it back and the blend was changed to suit her taste.

"That early store probably would be considered rather ornate today. On the walls were great oil paintings of Chinese scenes. A gallery ran around the store half-way between the floor and ceiling. There hung a multitude of bird cages."

During the anniversary celebration A. & P. stores will display a series of posters by Louis Fancher portraying the development of retail food distribution.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY — A Character Reading — By Harry J. Tuthill

I CLEANED OUT THE FRONT BEDROOM CLOTHES-CLOSET TODAY, AND AMONG SOME TRASH TESSIE STUFFED IN A CORNER, I FOUND THIS.... A COPY OF A VERY SNEERY LETTER ABOUT US THAT SHE SENT TO HER SISTER, ALMA.
WELL THAT SNEERING STUFF WAS A FOUR-HANDED THING.
AND ANY-HOW, WHY SHOULD WE TEAR OUR HAIR OUT ON ACCOUNT OF.?
LISTEN TO THIS... HER HATCHET-FACED HIGHNESS... THAT'S ME... DOES NOTHING BUT WALK AROUND ALL DAY WITH A GREASY DUST CLOTH IN HER HAND, MAKING INSULTING REMARKS ABOUT PEOPLE THAT SHE AND GEORGE DOESN'T LIKE... WHICH IS ALMOST EVERYBODY.
—d. U.S. PAT. OFF. 10-1
INCLUDING IKE. AND TESSIE TOO.
SHE SAYS.... GEORGE AND HER HAVE NO FRIENDS. HE IS VERY DUMB AND MONO-PLIZES.. HA, THERE'S HIGH CLASS SPELLING FOR YOU! ...AND MONO-PLIZES ALL CONVERSATIONS. IKE HAS NAMED HIM "THE BUS."
THE BUG? I WISH HE HAD CALLED ME THAT TO MY FACE.
BOTH OF THEM HAVE HIGH NOTIONS AND LIKE PEOPLE WHO CAN SWALLOW PRIDE AND TRUCKLE TO THEM. THEY EAT LIKE HORSES WHILE VISITING, BUT AT HOME ARE F-A-N-A-T-I-C-K-S. MORE GOOD SPELLING.... ON TRYING TO MAKE A DIME SOUP BONE LAST ALL WEEK.

Cutting Loose.

Hiram Hank grew tired of waiting for prosperity's return; he, with caution unabating, put his kopecks in an urn. Not a nickel was he spending, for his heart was full of dread; "When depression finds an ending, I will blow my wad," he said; "for a man is mad and raving who would spend his money now; so I'll keep on saving, saving, salting rubles anyhow." He was in an ancient dwelling that had warped and sagging floors, and the hinges all were yelling when he tried to shut the doors; and the window panes were busted and the chimneys wouldn't draw, and the walls with grime were crusted, quite the worst you ever saw. And he kept on saving money, salting down the hard-earned jack; when the times again were sunny he would build a decent shack. But one day a chunk of plaster fell and hit him on the head; "After such a punk disaster I will build a better house," he said; "I am tired of waiting dumbly for the brighter, better days; I am tired of watching glumly for the beacon lights to blaze. I am tired of grief unending, tired of hoarding groat and crown, when there is more fun in spending than in salting money down." So he made himself a building that was precious to behold, with a lot of costly gilding, and the doorknobs shone like gold. And the carpenters were sawing, and the painters plied their trade, and the plasterers were drawing coin that helped them make the grade. And old Hiram was so happy he forgot depression's woes, he was joyous, he was snappy, he was always on his toes. "This depression is deluding," he remarked, when all was done; "and the fellow who sits brooding misses out on lots of fun."

The Federal Diary

By Morgan Baker.
(Trade-mark Applied For)

A RECORD gathering of Government employes is expected at the mass meeting tomorrow night at Thomson Community Center, Twelfth and L streets northwest, to protest the impending dismissal of 1,800 persons at Internal Revenue, under the McKellar rider to the emergency appropriation act.

BAKER

Plans will be formulated for action to bring this matter before President Roosevelt and Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau. The mass meeting, which will be under auspices of the Civil Service Reinstatement League, will be addressed by Brig. Gen. Samuel T. Ansell, attorney; Miss Esther Penn, National secretary-treasurer of the American Federation of Government Employes, and other prominent persons.

The Attorney General will be asked to make another ruling on the McKellar rider. As it is considered unlikely that Mr. Cummings will do so, the imperiled employes are striving to have President Roosevelt allot PWA funds to pay their salaries until Congress can reconsider the act.

In order to protect the status of the Internal Revenue employes, the American Federation of Government Employes has suggested to Secretary Morgenthau that the group be placed on a furlough basis December 31, pending action of Congress.

All Federal employes and civic leaders are urged by the league to attend the meeting.

Challenges will be issued to other Government teams soon by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation pistol and rifle team, which has just been organized. Edison Counts, Treasurer's division, is president of the group and Herbert M. Toomey (*), is secretary. At the first shoot, Mr. Counts proved himself an expert marksman, leading a field of 15 contestants. O. W. Lewis, also of Treasurer's office, took second honors and M. S. Bray, of the same office, took third.

WHEN the Federal Bridge League gathers tomorrow night at 2400 Sixteenth street northwest for their second session of the winter season, the players will find the Marine Corps team leading. The league standing follows:

The Rush Job.

We've just turned in a big rush job,
It's left us worn and jagged;
From 8 a. m. till 8 at night—
Our nerves are all run ragged.

The blurring lines of '5-point font'
Put out our eyes proofreading;
And days and days we've thumped the 'comp'—
Our fingernails are bleeding.

But such is life for the U. S. clerk,
We're hardened, so why worry?
Just cut out eats and cut out sleep,
When Uncle Sam gets in a hurry.

EDITH M. WHYMAN (*),
Census Bureau.

TWO employes of Government Printing Office, Richard Powers and James B. Huss, have been promoted, effective today.

Mr. Powers (*), of Albuquerque, N. M., has been elevated to assistant superintendent of printing. He has worked in G. P. O. for about 30 years, working up from compositor to foreman and is considered well qualified by Public Printer Giegengack to assume his new duties.

Mr. Huss, of Waynesburg, Pa., has been named assistant foreman of the Night Proof Section. Mr. Huss has been with G. P. O. for more than 20 years, beginning as a compositor. He also has worked up in the proof section and has a high rating of efficiency.

Horace J. Donnelly Retires.

Holding the distinction of being the only person ever promoted from the ranks to the head of the Law Department of Postoffice Department, Horace J. Donnelly, solicitor from 1925 to 1933 and special counsel for the past year, will retire from Government service today.

Mr. Donnelly will engage in private practice in connection with John A. Nash, of Chicago. His firm, Nash & Donnelly, will also maintain an office in Washington.

A native of the District, Mr. Donnelly started in the lowest grade of the department established by Congress in 1872, he had been promoted successively through all the other numerous legal positions therein before reaching the top. One of the many duties of interest to the public was the enforcement of the postal frauds order statutes. He heard and decided many noted cases of mail fraud, involving millions of dollars.

Postmaster General Farley paid high tribute to Mr. Donneley's efficient and faithful services.

When a group of local amateurs presents "Uncle Tom's Cabin" this week, this talented radio and stage actress, Miss Rose Skopp, Collections and Loans, Veterans' Administration, will take the part of the prissy New Englander "Aunt Ophelia." Miss Skopp, a native of Poland and a citizen of Illinois, has studied drama in Moscow and Paris and has many Shakespearean roles.

Forcing the Dummy.

The ways in which the Declarer can use his trump suit to the greatest advantage are many and varied. He uses it to lead out his opponents' trumps and destroy their ruffing power; as stoppers to prevent the run of an established suit which is held against him; as a means of disposing of his own losing tricks by ruffing them with Dummy's short trump length. At times the trump suit fulfills still more complex duties, when Dummy's short trumps are used to serve as entries to an established long suit. In order to defend successfully against the Declarer, his adversaries must understand all of these methods and many more, so that they may plan a counterattack to prevent the Declarer from using his trumps to the best advantage.

In occasional cases the principal power of the trump suit is to furnish entry back to Declarer's hand. At such times the proper defense technique is to reverse the usual procedure of trying to prevent Declarer from ruffing with Dummy's short trump suit. Instead of preventing ruffs, the defense must force Dummy to ruff, so that eventually there will be no trumps left in Dummy for the Declarer to use in transferring the lead. In most cases, when such a condition exists, it must be recognized immediately so that the process of forcing the Dummy can be started at once. The very first lead is usually none too soon.

1—South makes his normal "One over One" response just as though the Double had not occurred.

2—This is still a Take-out Double. Spades and clubs having been bid against him, East is sure that West must hold a four-card suit in either hearts or diamonds.

3—Both adversaries having shown length in hearts, South is sure that West must hold a singleton or perhaps none at all. If the club suit is solid, it seems that four spades can be made.

West opened the heart deuce, and East knew that South must have four hearts, because West's deuce lead, which was probably his fourth highest, showed at most four cards in the suit. East could, therefore, see that in addition to his Aces of clubs, diamonds and hearts, he could win an extra heart trick and defeat the contract if Dummy's trumps could be exhausted before the club suit could be established and run. South must hold the club King to justify his bid of four spades, in which case one lead would clear that suit. The only hope was that if Dummy's trumps were sufficiently shortened, South would be unable to get back to his own hand to draw trumps, and West's last trump would prevent his running the club suit. East's plan of defense caused him to win the first heart with the Ace and return the heart nine. This was a deceptive measure, in case South held the heart Jack, to give the inference that West held the heart King and it would do South no good to play his Jack. As the cards were placed, it was unnecessary.

The heart nine was ruffed in Dummy and a club led to South's King, East ducking. Another club lead by South forced out East's Ace, and the heart Ten forced Dummy to ruff with the spade King. Now, since the club suit was established, South could have made his contract if he could have drawn trumps; but after leading the spade Ace he could not get back to his hand without giving East the lead in Diamonds and allowing East to cash his heart King for the setting trick.

It would have done South no good to lead a diamond from Dummy immediately and thus prepare to ruff himself into the lead later. This would merely have given East one more chance to lead hearts, and Dummy would have been forced to ruff the fourth heart with the spade Ace, establishing West's spade Ten as the setting trick. Neither would it have done any good, as the cards lay, to ruff both hearts with honors and then lead the spade three, as this course also would have lost a trick to West's spade Ten.

A spade lead by East after the first trick would have allowed the contract to be made, however; South would have established his clubs and then ruffed the heart with the spade Ace, retaining the spade trey to lead to his own long trump suit and draw trumps.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

They Catch Up On Sleep

That certainly was a quiet Sunday on Bear Creek. And it seemed all the more quiet because there had been so much going on for the past week. Nobody had been able to get anything but naps, for there was so much to do that it took a good deal of both day and night to keep up with it. It was a good thing that Jay Bird had gone to the mountains to see Bettie and the folks, for he is a talkative fellow, and it would have been mighty hard for him to keep quiet and let all the other Creek folks sleep all day. Every morning of his life he is up before the sun is. And even a dark drizzly day is one of the nicest sort of days to him, for that is the day that a lot of bugs can be found right at home under a piece of bark or root, and he never goes to bed hungry on a drizzly night. But he left the Creek very early that morning, and so there was nobody to disturb the folks.

Saturday night when they all left Blackie's house, after having such a big supper of ginger cake and cider, Blackie told them that he was going to sleep all day and clear through another night, and that they had better do the same thing, since nobody had done much sleeping for a week. "There's no telling what will be going on next week," he told them, "for these are busy days in the Creek Country, and we had better lay in a lot of sleep. This big harvest moon means that it is time for our neighbors to harvest their crops of good things to eat, and they may need us to help them gather some of them. Jay Bird said that when he was in town the other day he heard a good deal of talk about people not being able to get their crops gathered because they couldn't get enough help. We mustn't let a lot of their things spoil just because they can't get them in the house before Jack Frost catches them. If they need help, we must help them. They have been too good to us for us to let them have trouble of that sort. I will smoke a pipe or two over it when I get up on Monday, and maybe I can see some pictures in the smoke. You boys had better all come back then, and we will see what sort of plans we can work out."

And that's why there wasn't a single "who-who" nor "bow-wow" nor "woof-woof" in the whole Creek Country all day Sunday, and it's why Mr. Man and Uncle Joe would have been wasting time if they had been hunting for tracks of folks that had been to see them last week, for they never would have come across a single track. And it's why everybody was so rested up on Monday morning that they were in a hurry to hear what sort of plans their old king had smoked out of his big pipe.

We have all heard about "the calm before a storm," and it may be that mighty quiet Sunday was just that little breathing spell that comes in between games. It all depends on what sort of pictures the smoke from Blackie's pipe makes when he lights it up on Monday. When he gets right down to thinking, he can always cut out enough work to keep a lot of folks busy sewing up for a long time. There is no telling what he will cut out nor what it will look like when he gets it sewed up; but it is a good safe guess that there will be something good to eat mixed up with it. We will just have to wait and see.

AFTER EXCITEMENT AND STRAIN . . .

Get a LIFT with a Camel!

RAILROAD HISTORY entered a new phase as the Burlington's gleaming "Zephyr" flashed like a silver streak across the Great Plains from Denver to Chicago. Time: 13 hours and 5 minutes (nonstop)—1015 miles in 785 minutes—setting a whole flock of new records! On the throttle was the steady hand of Jack Ford, veteran engineer, who pulled the Fast Mail for years on the Chicago-Galesburg division. Below he tells what the long, nonstop trip felt like, and what Camels meant to him after it was over.

SPORTSWOMAN PILOT. Mrs. Cecil Kenyon, of Waban, Mass., says: "Camels are the mildest cigarette I know. Morning, noon, and night I can smoke them steadily—without a touch of upset nerves."

LEAF-TOBACCO EXPERTS AGREE: "Camels are made from finer, More Expensive Tobaccos—Turkish and Domestic—than any other popular brand."

MOTOR-BOAT RACER. Bill Horn, who drives a big racing hydroplane at 70 m. p. h., says: "It's a swell feeling, when tired, just to smoke a Camel and be your real self again. That's what I do whenever I feel played out."

SECRETARY. Says Elizabeth Harben: "You can feel plenty of nerve strain being a secretary. I smoke a great deal, but I am careful in my choice of cigarettes. I prefer Camels. They don't make my nerves jumpy."

A PLEASURE that drives away fatigue and listlessness!

Jack Ford, crack engineer of the Burlington on the "Zephyr's" amazing "dawn to dusk" dash, says:

"When the 'Zephyr' rolled to a stop at Chicago, what I wanted to do was let go of that throttle, pull out a deck of Camels, and light up. I'd been through a lot of excitement and strain and felt pretty much used up. But a Camel quickly gave me a 'lift' and I felt O.K.

"Most railroad engineers prefer Camels. They have a rich, good taste. And Camels also help to increase their energy when they feel worn out. I've smoked a lot of Camels in my time, and that goes for me—all the way."

Everyone is subject to strain—whether physical, mental, or emotional. So it's important to know that Camels do release your stored-up energy.

The findings of a famous scientific laboratory have confirmed Camel's "energizing effect." So begin today to enjoy Camels. Enjoy their wholesome and delightful "lift." Enjoy their mildness and rich, good taste. Enjoy them often! For the costlier tobaccos in Camels never affect the nerves.
